County Commission

Dispute over The Cove boat rentals resolved?

By Mike Steely

"Are we going to do business the next twenty years like this? I hope not," wondered Commissioner Carson Dailey last week at the Knox County Commission meeting. Dailey was referring to the award of a contract for boat rental The Cove at Concord Park.

"If it smells, it smells. Do I like it? No," he said adding that some of the expenses the county spent at the site for the operator need to be reimbursed. He also noted that he would vote, reluctantly, for the proposed 10-year contract for River Sports Outfitters to operate the venue there.

Kevin Hill, owner of Uncle Lem's Outfitters, had bid on the contract for rentals at The Cove and told the commission he felt that River Sports, which operates several boat, paddleboard and wakeboard rentals at several locations including Ijams Nature Center, had unfair information before the bidding.

He also charged that River Sports was supposed to maintain the building at The Cove but the county paid for repairs and upgrades there. Parks and Recreation Director Doug Bataille told the meeting that the building there is a "shared building" and includes bathrooms. He said the county did "minimal repairs" to the structure.

Hill charged that River Sports passed repair expenses back to the county to be paid in violation of their contract. He asked the commission to investigate the bidding process. Hill also said that River Sports listed one of its supporters as an employee when the man was not.

Law Director Bud Armstrong said that the time frame for objecting to the bid award had lapsed and any decision would go to the "people who evaluated the bids." He then said that the bid "seems to be valid."

Bataille said that in 15 years of working with River Sports Outfitters "nothing stands out" as far as problems. Ed McAlister, owner of River Sports, told the commission that his company "has never been accused" and had

Board of Education receives advice from students

By Pete Gawda

At their mid-month work session Monday evening the Knox County Board of Education received some information about what students think the board should look for in a superintendent.

In his report Interim Superintendent Buzz Thomas said that from to time they get advice and counsel from the students. He passed on to Chairman Patti Bounds a booklet titled "Things To Look For In Hiring A New Superintendent" prepared by students at Halls Elementary School. Among others things the students said a superintendent should be trustworthy, should love children, should be confident and should never be late.

Thomas went on to say that about 150 newly tenured teachers will be recognized at a program Tuesday, February 7 at 6 p.m. at the Sarah Simpson Professional Development Center. He announced that February 16 will be career day for middle school students and that the Teacher of the Year Banquet will be held February 21 at 6 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Downtown.

Thomas said he had shared the board's resolution against school vouchers with Senator Lamar Alexander but had received no response.

Board member Terry Hill gave an update on legislative priorities of CLASS (Coalition of Large Area School Systems). She mentioned the state's reported $2 billion windfall. Hill said about $1 billion of that total comes from one time revenues and $1 million comes from recurring revenues. She was hopeful that part of the recurring revenues would go toward teacher raises. Hill said that statewide 12% of school positions are unfunded. However in Knox County 17.6% are unfunded, almost one in five. Those positions are funded by local and not state funds. Board member Lynne Fugate noted that part of the reason for the larger number of unfunded positions in Knox County is the mathematical formula used by the state to determine funding. She said the state's formula does not always match student enrollment in individual schools, especially in larger districts. She said the state's formula would be more accurate if all the students were in one building. Fugate added that the assumption is that larger school systems can fund more positions and often larger schools systems are pitted against smaller systems. Continued on page 3

Historic Overlay in East Knoxville draws objections

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

"I didn't expect the turnout to be this great," said Knoxville Historic Planner Kaye Graybeal recently during a public hearing on the proposed Edgewood-Park City Historic Zoning District. What she also probably didn't expect were the many hostile comments and pointed questions from those attending the meeting at the O'Connor Senior Center.

The proposal is to expand the city's historic overlay from the current Park City designation to include more than 500 homes, churches and businesses. Many of the homes are either owned by low income families and the elderly or are rental units with absentee landlords.

While there were a few supporters in the audience, the vast majority were very concerned with the new restrictions and costs the Historic designation would incur. Under the designation homes and businesses in the area would have to closely match and exterior repairs or renovations to the original intent of the structure, apply to the Historic Zoning Commission and pay a fee, and then get a separate building permit if the initial one was approved.

The costs of permits from Historic Zoning range from $50 to $500, depending on the work to be done. The cost of materials to match the original intent would probably be higher as well as would the labor and the separate building

"It does not require you to make improvements," Graybeal told the audience. She then explained that planned improvements would be reviewed and suggestions made.

"It gives you an extra set of eyes," she said of proposed historic overlay.

Currently repairs to the outside of the 525 homes and buildings require only a building permit. The change would require a fee and permit, a building permit, a delay of time, finding acceptable replacement parts, and inspection during and after the repairs.

Some repair requests would also require an before appearance the Historic Planning Commission.

Graybeal said that most of the homes in the proposed area are craftsman-style, smaller structures. She also said the MPC doesn't "want to take this forward until we include guidelines" that could be suggested by the neighborhood. She said the guidelines could include replacement of windows, accessory structures, fences, materials, lead paint and new construction of "infill houses."

She said the "pros" of the historic overlay includes stabilization of property values, heritage preservation and technical assistance during renovation. The "cons" she described include more foresight and planning on the homeowner's end, the additional cost of permits and materials, and the extra review time for projects.

"There's a lot we can do to help you reduce your cost," she said of repairs. She also suggested additional meetings to develop the neighborhood guidelines.

squeeze?" she asked.

Forum: What's the advantage to a historic overly?

One homeowner said that simply replacing a storm door could involve a lot of paperwork and effort plus the cost. Graybeal said that permits issued for Historic Overlay structure improvements are good for three years. The owner commented they wanted bars on their storm door for safety.

"They don't care our homes are safe; they just want it to look good," the lady commented.

Another resident noted that the proposed expansion included the homes of "a lot of working people, rental houses, and poor families.

Graybeal said a draft of the proposed historic overlay will be available on the MPC website and agreed, "We see a need to provide more flexible guidelines."

Linda Rust, Community Development Administrator, joined Graybeal to address the audience and said the city has programs to help homeowners with repairs.

audience Another member said the historic overlay would cause homeowner's insurance to "go through the roof."

"Tell us what it's going to "Is the juice worth the cost us!" another person shouted.

> Another concern voiced by the neighborhood homeowners was that property values increase, the diversity of the neighborhood would change economically and racially.

Graybeal replied that the changes "depends on what the neighborhood wants" and said that racial and economic changes in other city areas in historic overlay districts "doesn't appear it happened very quickly."

One audience member asked who asked for the historic designation and referred to the "urban renewal" during the 50's and 60's that forced some people to move, adding, "They will be moving again."

Another local homeowner asked when the Parkridge Community Organization meets and was told the organization meets on the first Monday of each month at 6:30 at the Cansler YMCA. The group has been supporting the idea of a Historic Overlay survey.

"A historic district doesn't cause people to leave. We don't want people to leave," Graybeal said.

Another neighborhood homeowner commented that the area is improving without being in the historic district and asked the city to support those changes, adding, "I don't see why a restrictive overlay is required."

One lady said that historic funds should be available to help restore some features.

"If you're asking me to do it your way then you should be paying for it," she said.

One supporter of the proposal said that the idea is to protect the structures moving forward.

An opponent said that prohibited repairs without a permit could include building a handicapped ramp, adding a deck or screen to a porch, putting in energy efficient vinyl windows, building new porch steps or porch railings and adding vinyl siding.

The historic overlay plan, requested by the neighborhood association, was approved in April of 2016 by the City Council. Additional public hearings will be held and anyone can comment by contacting Kay Graybeal at 865-215-3795 or or edgewoodparkcityh1@ gmail.com.

The Historic Zoning Commission Metropolitan Planning Commission will eventually make a recommendation to the City Council. More information about the MPC can be found at www. knoxmpc.org.

What would the new historic designation include?

The resolution that passed City Council to have the planning commission study a possible Historic District designation includes East Glenwood Avenue from Interstate 40 to Spruce Street; Washington Avenue from the Old Standard Knitting Mill Complex to North Chestnut Street; Jefferson, Woodbine, and East 5th Avenues from the Old Standard Knitting Mill Complex to North Cherry Street; and the Old East Knoxville Library Building and 2455 East Magnolia Avenue to the H-1 Historic Overlay.

Councilman Daniel Brown introduced the resolution during the March council meeting and was present at the public session at the O'Connor Senior Center. Brown told The Focus that he was not surprised at the questions and contentious meeting.

"When I was first approached by the Parkridge Organization I hadn't heard from the rest of the people. My job it to listen well," he said.

"There's a division there, I think I got that. I think Kaye Graybeal did a great job dealing with it as best she could," Brown said.

"Some people don't understand the proposal, let's let the process play itself out," he said.

The commission also heard that the Joint Education Committee will meet with school board members on Wednesday, ers Anders, Gill, Charles Busler and Michelle Carringer are members of that committee.

The proposed expansion of the Park City Historic District would involve more than 500 homes and buildings. A public hearing recently saw many residents question the cost and restrictions that such a designation might create. (Photo from Metropolitan Planning Commission)

Publisher's Position

Change is on the Way

By Steve Hunley, Publisher publisher@knoxfocus.com

Most of the folks who voted for Donald Trump wanted some kind of change in Washington, D.C. There were doubtless folks who likely voted for Trump in the hope of some minor, albeit meaningful changes in the way things are done. There were probably a great many other folks who voted for Trump in the hope there would be sweeping change. Trump's early Cabinet picks are indicative that we are changes in the way busi- to bail out the Detroit public ness is done in the nation's school system at a cost of Capitol.

While all of Trump's Cabinet picks will likely to be assailed by the national media, the leftists are really grumbling about Alabama Senator Jeff Sessions becoming Attorney General of the United States. Sessions is offensive to the mainstream media because it seems readily apparent he will drastically affect immigration policy simply by taking the novel approach of merely enforcing existing law. The choice of Betsy DeVos to serve as Secretary of Education has just about caused the heads of the National Education Association (the teachers' union) to explode. The leftists are already chattering Ms. DeVos is anti-public education. Of course coming from Michigan, where the several billion dollars to the taxpayers, Betsy DeVos has been a strong supporter of charter schools and vouchers. Detroit is also where several educators and administrators were sentenced to prison for accepting bribes and kickbacks from a businessman who was doing business with the public school system. Still, the NEA would have us believe there are no bad educators. The teachers' union is, naturally, horrified by Betsy DeVos's appointment as Secretary of Education and will wage a bitter fight against her nomination when it is sent to the United States Senate. We've all heard the argument that support for charter schools takes away needed money for public schools. Keep in mind charter schools against children with special needs, including those with disabilities; charter schools may not pose special requirements for admission nor can they teach religion. Charter schools must adhere to all the same guidelines imposed by the state and federal governments, just like any other public school. Charter schools, like every other public school in America, must administer tests and follow all standards set by the state. The primary difference between a charter school and the ordinary public school is how charter schools teach the curriculum. To use Colorado as an example, six of the top ten middle schools in the state are charter schools and seven of the top ten high schools are charter schools. Five of the ten schools with the highest failure is that the people going to see some big state government has had cannot charge tuition, ACT scores are charter nor can they discriminate schools. From the statistics available, almost 47% of the students attending charter schools in Colorado are minorities.

The unionists cry that they are protecting the children; the truth is they are protecting their own interests and political cartel. Children don't pay union dues and the teachers' union has fought bitterly to keep the doors open for failing schools. They argue that the problem can be solved through spending more money. We've tried that solution here locally and oddly, the schools where we have spent the most money per student continue to languish. Obviously that approach has failed and doesn't work, otherwise there would be much more improvement than we've seen. The only other explanation for that spending the money don't know how best to spend it for positive results. Neither explanation is reassuring.

Ultimately, the thesis of the unionists is the government knows what's best for your child; they are perfectly content to allow government officials to make all the decisions to the exclusion of the parents. The union will always maintain teachers should not be and cannot be fairly evaluated by how much students learn. That might protect their jobs, but it sure doesn't help either children or the quality of education. Much as they may to try and argue otherwise, charter schools are indeed public schools.

Betsy DeVos is an innovative choice to serve as Secretary of Education and is yet another signal that change is on the way.

Fifth rezoning meeting held at Holston Middle

"Keep our community schools," was the theme echoed by many of the speakers at a rezoning meeting held Tuesday night at Holston Middle School. E-911 agencies asked to cut back on usage By Mike Steely

The emergency response groups in Knox County are being asked to "play nice" with each other over the next few months while new equipment is being installed and readied for ser-

E-911 Interim Director Allen Bull asked for the cooperation of police, fire, sheriff and ambulance services during the period. Bull made the comments during a meeting of the E-911 Board earlier this month. The various groups will be sharing a 10 channel radio system until the new system is operational and then will share two 10 channel systems.

He said the organizations may need to "curtail a bit" on usage during the period. Last year, after much debate, the board voted to buy an $8.7 million digital communications system from Motorola.

The board also heard a report on a computer problem and a server reset a few weeks ago with the cause still unknown and problems with the current mapping system that sometimes shows streets that no longer exist. The county and city rely on the Computer Assisted Dispatching system (CAD) in dispatching the closest units to an emergency.

developing a "Smart 911" system and that the local E-911 system has been selected for testing it, which involves downloading an app to a cell phone.

Board member Brad Anders, who is a county commissioner and a city policeman, said that Intergraph, which supplies the CAD System, is "a pain in our side" and asked why the invoice from Intergraph is so high. Bull responded that Intergraph had been billing the system often for maintenance and service and, at his request, summarized the cost in one billing.

Anders questioned a $400,000 charge for maintenance.

"We need to call them on the mat!" said Chairman and County Mayor Tim Burchett. He asked board attorney Don Howell to look into it and Howell replied he wonders if the system isn't being billed for services that have already been paid.

David Rausch, an E-911 board member and Knoxville Police Chief, suggested that the E-911 Building be named for the late Alan Lawson, who spent 35 years with the Knox County Emergency Management Agency and retired last year. Mayor Burchett said he will talk with Knoxville Mayor Madeline Rogero about the honor but added that the designation may need to go to both the county commission and city council for approval.

Dr. M.W. Rhyne has new location

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The East Tennessee Binocular Vision Center, at 9051 Executive Park Drive, Suite 401, is the new home of Dr. M.W. Rhyne and his practice. Dr. Rhyne opened the new office to continue and extend his Vision Specialty, Vision Development, Vision Rehabilitation and Vision Therapy.

From 1978 until last June the optometrist was part of Rhyne and Patton on Callahan Drive. The Focus interviewed Dr. Rhyne on his 69th birthday recently and he said he began his career in 1971 with Dr. Jim Tumblin in Fountain City.

"He was my doctor and I was planning to become a pediatric doctor until I had back surgery," he said. Tumblin encouraged him became an eye doctor and, after returning from college, he joined the practice.

"I've always been interested in kids and wanted an occupation where I didn't have to lift kids," he said.

Dr. Rhyne's patients have followed him to his new location, which he opened Heiskell Community. in January. He specializes in working with children who have trouble using their eyes because of a head injury, brain problems or autism.

The East Tennessee Binocular Vision Center offers a full scope of optometric care and emphasizes the diagnoses and treatment of visual disorders associated with development delays, learning difficulties, and problems caused by trauma. The prescribed treatment involves specialty lenses and vision therapy. "We use lenses and how the brain takes information in from the eyes," he said of his specialty of 42 years.

The doctor also works with adults and with the Patricia Neal Rehabilitation Center and said that probably the biggest part of his practice is treating vision problems of adults and stroke victims.

His son, Seth, a UT student, is working with him and is planning to also become an optometrist. His wife, Susan, is a registered nurse and the Rhynes live on the historic family farm in the

The new Rhyne office is unique as much of the furnishings are family heirlooms, historic pieces or handmade items by the doctor. The benches in the waiting room were salvaged from the old Southern Railway Depot, the eyeglass boards were crafted by Dr. Rhyne, and the paintings on sawmill blades were painted by Christy Davis. Davis had been a patient who the doctor helped restore her vision and she painted a portrait of Rhyne's father on a blade that hangs on the wall

Doctors and organizations from all over the nation send patients to see Rhyne. He is currently treating a woman who had brain surgery performed by former presidential candidate Dr. Ben

Dr. Rhyne was honored in 2016 by the Consumer Research Council of America as one of America's Top Optometrists.

Hobo Supports Pet Dental Health Month

Hobo the Wonder Dog in celebration of National Pet Dental Health Month visited his veterinarian for a complete oral examination and dental cleaning. Dental health has a significant effect on overall health and well-being for us and our pets. Good dental health and hygiene helps keep pets healthy mentally and physically. A bright white smile helps self-esteem and confidence while helping protect the kidneys, liver, and heart from disease. Hobo suggests celebrating National Pet Dental Health Month by having your pet's teeth checked by your veterinarian.

The whiff test could be the first clue your pet has a dental problem worth investigating by your pets veterinarian. Gum disease and chronic inflammation of the gums increases the risk for kidney, liver, and heart disease. According to the American

By Howard Baker, RN BSN

Veterinarian Medical Association, oral disease is the most frequently diagnosed health problem for pets. Do not assume bad breath or "dog breath" is normal—it is not. A dog failing the whiff test needs a dental examination.

- 2. Bad breath
- 3. Weight loss and / or a decrease
- in appetite
- 4. Loose teeth
- 5. Facial or mouth sensitivity
- 6. Drooling or dropping food
- 7. Bleeding gums

Knowing the signs and symptoms of oral disease helps promote good dental health in our pets. Nothing replaces having a complete and thorough oral examination annually by a veterinarian. Professional pet dental cleaning requires anesthesia and obviously comes with risk. Learning how to properly brush your pet's teeth and which products help promote dental hygiene may help reduce the need for professional dental cleanings. The Veterinary Oral Health Council (www.vohc.org) has a list of pet approved products to promote dental health.

National Pet Dental Month is the perfect time to schedule an appoint-1. Yellow teeth or teeth ment to have your pets teeth cleaned and start a routine for a home dental care program. NEVER use human toothpaste for your pet; many types of toothpaste include fluoride and sweeteners that are poisonous to dogs. The American Animal Hospital Association (www.aaha.org) is another great resource with tips on how to brush your pet's teeth and keeping your pup healthy and happy. Remember, nothing will replace a comprehensive dental examination by your veterinarian.

Life is better with a dog (when its breath is clean)-woof!

Hobo the Wonder Dog encourages you to celebrate National Pet Dental Month with a dental examination and clean teeth. Annual dental check-ups will help prevent periodontal disease that causes pain, tooth loss, and may cause your pet to loose enjoyment of play. Keep your dog in the game and have their teeth checked today.

Taking a long nap

I watched the NFL/AFL playoff games and was disappointed with both outcomes. With the exception of the years that Peyton and Eli won the big games, I've managed to be on the wrong side of the score most years. What shocks me is that this year is Super Bowl 51. How'd that happen? I've been around for everyone one of the championship games, but I've not always watched them.

I saw the first super bowl. Green Bay took on the Kansas City Chiefs. I wasn't a fan of the Packers then, so I cheered for the Chiefs. Hank Stram was a good coach, but he went up against Vince Lombardi, whom some say is the best coach to come around, he discovered that winning wasn't always so easy. My heart sank as his team went down in defeat 35-10.

The second super bowl was anti-climatic. The most memorable game of the season occurred when Green Bay and Dallas battled in the "Ice Bowl." Again, the Packers broke my heart when they beat "Dandy Don Meredith" and the Cowboys. That roster listed some of the best names for players: Jethro Pugh, Bob Lilly, Lee Roy Jordan, and Lance Rentzel. Bob Hayes, known as the world's fastest human, streaked down the field. When they fell short, my heart wasn't in any championship game.

The Sunday of Super

with the funeral of my paternal grandmother. weather was frigid that day with a low of 1degree. We came home afterward, and the men tried to watch the game, especially since it featured the Miami Dolphins, who were undefeated throughout the season and won the big game. However, the gloom that filled the air took away any excitement.

I pulled for the Cowboys until I couldn't take it anymore. My favorite players had retired or moved to other teams, and I just never like Tom Landry. Watching them lose each year hurt too much.

For a long time, I was tired of watching the Steelers play in super bowls. Besides, most of the plays in games never lived up to the "immaculate reception" by Franco Harris. The only other play I recall during those games was the stretching pass reception made by Lynn Swann. I can still see that toothless grin of Jack Hamm as he prepared to diagnose a play and destroy a running back or crossing wide receiver.

During many seasons, the super bowl was a game that featured two teams about whom I was only lukewarm in interest. Yes, some great players participated, and some of the games were exciting, but they lacked one thing:

Bowl VII began either side. If the game was on my television, I hohummed my way through it. On occasion, as when Janet Jackson took center stage, the halftime entertainment was better than the game.

As I mentioned earlier, my interest piqued when super bowls featured the Manning boys. Both are favorites of mine, which is funny since I never liked their dad after the "Archie Who" butt-kicking he administered to Tennessee in 1969. His boys, however, were favorites of many Vol fans, and a championship game featuring either of them was something to look forward to.

This year, I might skip the whole event. Atlanta is all right, but I am sick of watching the Patriots in the final game of the season. Yes, they are a good team, but just like some other teams, I'm tired of watching them. Before long, their players will retire, and hopefully, fans won't have to watch them hoist super bowl trophies for a while. I won't even be able to watch the halftime show since Lady Gaga isn't an artist whose songs take up a single byte on my iPod.

Winter is a terrible sports season. I hold my breath, close my eyes tightly, and pray for spring training and baseball. When the super bowl is lousy, the wait is even more excruciating. If your favorite team is playing football on February 5, good luck. I'll be taking a long nap that day.

Early Education Provides Mold for Outstanding Life

Reflections of Memphis

"After two years (1962-1963) of practicing general dentistry in the Knoxville area, I knew that, rather than general practice, there was more in the profession that I wanted." Those words were expressed

Perry McGinnis, though they could describe the feelings of many people who strive to find their place in life with a job that provides not only an income but gives much joy and satisfaction as well.

Perry met with a close personal friend and dental school classmate for lunch to talk about possible alternatives in his quest to find his true calling. During that lunch with the late Dr. Ben Alley, a well known oral surgeon in Knoxville and at The University of Tennessee

(UT) Hospital, he encouraged Perry to inquire about a post-doctoral program in pathology conducted jointly through the UT Colleges of Dentistry and By Ralphine Major Medicine at the ralphine3@yahoo. UTMedicalCenter in Memphis. "This > program was headed by one of our former dental school teachers, Dr. James F. Smith, and was part of a U.S. Public Health Service (USPHS) Fellowship that provided graduate training, teaching experience, and research in pathology," Perry said. "After contacting Dr. Smith for details, the application was culminated with my enrollment in January 1964, thus, laying the groundwork for an almost 40-year career as an oral pathologist and dental academician," he added.

But, for Perry to pursue his dream that would lead to this outstanding career, it meant a second move to Memphis for their, now, family of four.

The young McGinnis family lived in Whitehaven, a neighborhood in South Memphis near the Mississippi state line. This would be their home from January 1964 through June 1977. "Prior to being purchased by Elvis, and before he gave the farm its new name of Graceland, that land was a working horse farm where we used to rent and ride horses," Perry said. "After Elvis moved in, we used to see and photograph him with his many friends riding their go-carts around the long driveways inside the beautiful wrought iron gate and fence." What a special memory to have of the late rock-n-roll idol! (To be continued)

Knox County Health Department offers free influenza vaccinations

Influenza activity has increased over the past month, and it is expected to continue in the coming weeks. To help protect the community, the Knox County Health Department (KCHD) will offer free flu vaccinations while supplies last.

"If you haven't had a flu vaccine this season, it's not too late," said KCHD Director of Clinical Services Dr. Kelly Cooper. "In fact, the CDC recommends flu vaccination as long as the virus is circulating in the community.

And, vaccination is still the best protection available from this virus and its potentially serious complications."

Free flu vaccinations are available at KCHD's main location, 140 Dameron Ave.; the West Clinic, 1028 Old Cedar Bluff Rd.; and Teague Clinic, 405 Dante Rd. Appointments can be made by calling 865-215-5070. In addition to vaccination, it's important for the public to:

· Wash hands well and often by scrubbing with soap and water for at least 20 seconds. Influenza can be spread by touching surfaces that are contaminated with the virus and then touching your eyes, nose or mouth. · Cover coughs and sneezes. Most respiratory illnesses can be spread to others up to six feet away.

· Stay home if sick and keep children home if they are. Stay home at least 24 hours after the fever is gone without the use of fever-reducing

Cordell Hull & the Income Tax

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

"The hardest thing in the world to understand is income taxes." – Albert Einstein.

Congressman Cordell Hull of Tennessee is frequently credited with being the "Father of the Income Tax." Today, that is likely a dubious distinction. When the income tax was first approved in 1913, the tax code was fifteen pages long. Today, the tax code is more than 74,000 pages. Hull first came to Congress in 1906 after having been something of a local boy wonder. Cordell Hull had been Chairman of the Clay County Democratic Party when he was nineteen years old. At twenty-one, Hull was elected to the Tennessee House of Representatives and later became a Circuit Court judge. Hull fought a difficult battle for the Democratic nomination for Congress in 1906 and while the vote count varies, he won by less than twenty votes.

Hull remained in Congress, representing the Fourth District, a hardscrabble group of counties in Middle Tennessee, which were religiously Democratic in their voting habits. The congressman represented an agrarian district and many of Hull's constituents made their living as farmers. When he went to Washington. Cordell Hull was a bachelor and unlike some of his colleagues, the Tennessean cared little or nothing about social life in the nation's Capitol. Hull tended to his district and intensely studied legislation he believed would help Tennessee and the country. Cordell Hull was quickly recognized as an expert on taxation and tariff issues. Prior to the passage of the income tax, the United States derived most of its income from tariffs and excise taxes, which disproportionally affected the middle and lower classes of the country. Tariffs placed taxes upon imported products, while excise taxes were placed on items like whiskey. Not surprisingly, tariffs were frequently unpopular with many Americans because they drove up the cost of many goods used

When Cordell Hull first came to Congress, there was no income tax, nor was there any Social Security, few pensions for individuals, no organized health care, and no entitlement programs of any

by the average person or families.

Hull's "maiden speech" in Congress was on the subject of the income tax, which attracted little or no notice. Cordell Hull had a tendency to become obsessive about certain issues and the income tax was one of those. Hull recalled in his memoirs, "I must confess, I got nowhere with income tax in the Sixtieth Congress." Hull related he talked about the topic in numerous speeches and "talked to any member of either House of Congress who was willing to listen to me." Congressman Hull sadly remembered, "I talked to some Congressmen so often they were no longer willing to listen. I well recall that House leaders such as John Sharp Williams and Champ Clark, although strongly favoring an income tax, would turn and walk in another direction when they saw me approaching."

Cordell Hull explained why he believed an income tax was necessary. "I have no disposition to tax wealth unnecessarily or unjustly, but I do believe that the wealth of the country should bear its just share of the burden of taxation and that it should not be permitted to shirk that duty. Anyone at all familiar with the legislative history of the nation must admit that the chief burdens of government have long been borne by those least able to bear them, while accumulated wealth has enjoyed the protection and other blessings of the Government and thus far escaped most of its accompanying burdens."

Always persistent, Congressman Cordell Hull began to gather increasing support from other representatives from the Southern and Western states. As support for an income tax grew, opponents began to become concerned. Congress had once before approved an income tax, which was struck down by the United States Supreme Court in 1894 as unconstitutional. It was the opponents of the income tax who miscalculated when they proposed to sponsor a Constitutional amendment. The opponents figured by sponsoring a Constitutional amendment to establish an income tax, it would force Congressional proponents to drop their bid to enact an income tax legislatively. The opponents were confident it would be impossible for a Constitutional amendment to receive approval

by three-fourths of the states.

The House Ways and Means Committee moved with alacrity in moving out the income tax proposal. In recommending passage by the full House, the Ways and Means Committee issued a statement noting, "Those citizens required to do so can well afford to devote a brief time during some one day in each year to the making out of a personal return...willingly and cheerfully."

Not everyone shared the opinion of the House Ways and Means Committee. The richest man in America, John D. Rockefeller snapped, "When a man has accumulated a sum of money within the law...the people no longer have any right to share in the earnings resulting from the accumulation."

Hull watched in wonder when the proposed Constitutional amendment sailed through the United States Senate on a vote of 77 - 0. It passed the House of Representatives by a margin of 318 - 14 in the summer of 1909. By 1913, three-quarters of the individual states had ratified the amendment and the income tax was a fact. "Here at last," Hull exulted, "was fruition to my work and study of twenty years."

Forty-two stated ratified the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution, with only six states rejecting it.

Virginia was one of those states that refused to ratify the Constitutional amendment for an income tax. Richard E. Byrd, Speaker of Virginia's House of Delegates, spoke passionately against ratification. "A hand from Washington will be stretched out and placed upon every man's business, the eye of the federal inspector will be in every man's counting house," Byrd thundered. "The law will of necessity have inquisitional features, it will provide penalties, it will create complicated machinery. Under it men will be haled into courts distant from their homes. Heavy fines imposed by distant and unfamiliar tribunals will payer. An army of federal inspectors, spies, and detectives will descend upon the state."

Few, if any, members of Congress lost their seats for having supported an income tax, chiefly because so few people paid it. The tax rate was 1% on income over $3,000 for a single person and over $4,000 for a married person. For those lucky individuals earning over $500,000 per year, the income tax rate was 6%. The average amount paid by Americans in income taxes was $97.88. The average American worker earned around $800 annually. Only 4% of Americans made more than $3,000 per year. John D. Rockefeller paid an estimated $2 million the first year the income tax was collected. One taxpayer wrote the Bureau of Internal Revenue to say, "I have purposely left out some deductions I could claim, in order to have the privilege and the pleasure of paying at least a small income tax..."

The income tax rates did not remain at that low level for long. The United States entered World War I in 1917 and immediately needed cash for preparations. The United States had a budget of $1 billion in 1916; by the end of the war in 1919, the budget had grown to $19 billion. The size of the Internal Revenue Service grew along with the tax rates. The IRS employed 4,000 workers in 1913; by 1919 it employed some 21,000 workers. The tax rate for those rare individuals earning more than $1 million annually was 77%. Tax revenue did increase dramatically. Total tax revenue collected by the United States government went from $344 million to $5.4 billion. The percentage of revenue derived from income taxes went constantly menace the tax from 10% to 73%.

Originally, the income tax was promoted to be temporary and many rightly worried it would become permanent. The effect was immediate with revenue from taxes growing from $21 million in 1910 to $34.8 million in 1912. America's businessmen paid almost 90% of those income taxes paid into the U. S. treasury.

From 1913 - 1921, the Democrats had held both the White House and the Congress. In 1918, the Democrats suffered defeat in the midterm elections, which, along with his serious illness, hampered the administration of President Woodrow Wilson. Champ Clark was replaced as Speaker of the House by Frederick Gillett of Massachusetts, despite the plea of President Wilson, who warned the electorate he would consider the election of a Republican Congress a repudiation of his administration. The 1918-midterm elections foretold a change of administrations in 1920. The Republicans elected three presidents during the decade of the 1920s and the income tax rate was cut, although it never went back to the low rates of 1913.

Herbert Hoover, a Republican, occupied the White House when the Great Depression hit America. Many Americans could not afford to pay any kind of tax and those lucky enough to earn approximately $16,000 paid about $1,000 in income taxes. To give readers an idea of just how much buying power $16,000 had in 1929, it would be the equivalent of more than $224,000 in today's dollars.

Nor did his advocacy of an income tax affect Cordell Hull's political fortunes. Although he lost his Congressional seat in the 1920 Republican landslide, he was reelected easily in 1922 when he faced his GOP successor. Hull was never again seriously challenged inside Tennessee's Fourth Congressional district and in 1930 he was elected to the United States Senate. Once in the Senate, Hull was assigned to the Senate's Finance Committee in recognition of his fiscal expertise and interests. Hull did not remain long in the Senate, selected by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt to serve as Secretary of State. Cordell Hull became the longest serving Secretary of State in our country's history. Hull had few peers throughout American history for the admiration and respect he won from his fellow countrymen.

Hull was still serving as Secretary of State when the income tax rates jumped sharply, yet again because of war. In 1939, before the advent of World War II, there were roughly 6.5 million Americans paying the income tax; collectively, those folks paid about $1 billion annually. By the end of World War II, some 48 million Americans were paying income taxes and annual revenues averaged around $19 billion. Once again, the IRS grew along with the tax rates and revenue. The IRS employed some 27,000 workers in 1941 and 50,000 in 1945 when World War II ended.

The Chicago Tribune summed up the difference in the lives of Americans, noting the war had changed the income tax "from a class tax to a mass tax."

A gathering of hope

I recently received a little book written by Helen Hayes called, "A Gathering Of Hope." We older ones remember Helen I'm sure, but, for the younger ones let me explain that she was a famous actress, born in 1900, died in 1993 of congestive heart failure. A star of many movies, such as "A Farewell To Arms," "Stage Door Canteen," and "Airport," her career spanned over eighty years. She received many awards from her work in theatre, movies and television. If you have a computer, Google her and you will be amazed at what she accomplished during her lifetime.

In her book she recites many poems, psalms, and a few interesting paragraphs about her own life. Here is a paragraph which meant a lot to me as I read it:

I am old now and I'm going to die. And yet, I am living in a time that puts a premium on youth, a time so selfconscious about becoming old and dying that it will not even allow use of the proper words. We have all sorts of euphemisms for aging: the sunset years, the autumn of one's life, the golden years. When it comes to the real issue, there are more: he passed away, she has left for the eternal spring, they've joined the blessed flock.

To paraphrase the Bible, where is the sting in the fact that I will someday die? Rather, I would tend to agree with Thomas Jefferson, who once said, "My only fear is that I may live too long."

However, the book is not just about dying, it's about celebrating life as long as we have it. That gathering of hope is prevalent in her book. She also said, "with age comes the tendency to summon up the people, places, and events of days gone by. But that tendency is far from being melancholy. Thoughts of good times spent, combined with the hope of a new life in the future, are very joyous!"

One of the best quotations in her book is also one of my favorites. Written by St. Francis of Assisi.

Lord, make me an instrument of your peace.

Where there is hatred, let me sow love,

Where there is injury, pardon,

Where there is doubt,

Where there is despair, hope,

Where there is darkness,

Where there is sadness, joy.

O Divine Master,

Grant that I may not so much seek

To be consoled as to console. To be understood as to understand,

To be loved as to love. for it is in giving that we receive.

It is in pardoning that we are pardoned,

And it is in dying

That we are born to eternal life.

Written way back in the 12th century, these words can certainly be ascribed to our lives today.

Rivals FBA and TBA are shaking it up again this week

By Steve Williams

The rivalry between First Baptist Academy of Powell and Temple Baptist Academy is no longer new, but it appears to be as exciting as ever.

Basketball teams of the two schools, only about five minutes apart, will meet for the second time this season Friday night at FBA. The girls game will start at 6 and the boys contest at 7:30.

In the first meeting of the season on Dec. 15 at Temple Baptist, the TBA girls won 38-30 and the Temple boys prevailed 61-60.

The two schools also are again competing in a fundraiser - "the Battle of the Bottles" - this year, collecting change in baby bottles to support Hope Resource Center, which ultimately supports the gift of life, said Matt Mercer, FBA head master and boys basketball

First Baptist Academy won the competition last year as the two schools combined to raise $9,000.

As for the basketball games, Coach Mercer said, "It'll be packed."

It will also be Senior Night for the FBA teams.

The Eagles are 13-8 and have won six games in a row, heading into this past weekend's play. The FBA boys also will host the Knoxville Ambassadors, a home school team, tonight (Jan. 30) at 8.

"We're starting to hit our stride," said Mercer. "We started the season with 15 players but are down to nine healthy players. Three of the injured players are starters. We hope two will be back and cleared to play (this) week."

Senior post player Nick Campbell has been lost for the year with a foot injury.

Warriors hold off Ice Dawgs to claim second place

The Knoxville Warriors entered the final night of the Knoxville Amateur Hockey Association High School League regular season with a chance to win the league

But before Knoxville even took the ice, its championship hopes had vanished. But that wasn't a problem as the Warriors notched a 4-2 victory over the Bearden Ice Dawgs Wednesday night at the Icearium.

Knoxville saw its title chances disappear when Farragut notched a 5-0 victory over the Knoxville Knights in the evening's opening game.

Farragut won its second consecutive KAHA championship and captured an automatic bid to the Blue Division State Tournament in Memphis in March. All, however, is not lost for the Warriors. They play Farragut Thursday night in KAHA's Wild Card round.

That game, which is slated to begin at 6:40 p.m., will not count on the record and the individual statistics also will not go into the record books. Knoxville, with a victory, however, second stanza.

Halls High School boys basketball coach Randy Moore was all smiles Tuesday night after his Red Devils notched a 47-42 victory over Black Oak Ridge Rival Central in Fountain

"Tonight, we executed on offense and we did what we do," Moore said after Halls had to grit out a victory over the Bobcats in a key District 3-AAA showdown. "We're not a runand-gun team that likes to run up and down the floor. We probably executed our offense as good tonight as we have all year.

Farragut Middle School girls make noise with title run

By Steve Williams

Susan Davidson, Farragut Middle School girls basketball head coach, still remembers her team's first game of the season loud and clear.

It was an in-school game at Karns.

"We lost by two points," recalled Davidson. "It was a packed house, standing room only. For middle school kids, that was a really neat experience and environment. the fans' support too in his post-game comments.

"I appreciate our fans," he said. "I thought they were outstanding." Give Barnes a hand also.

He outcoached Kentucky's John Calipari, several times calling plays during timeouts that the Vols executed for points when they returned to the court. Calipari's strength, how-

It's his program, which has become a magnet for top prospects and in many cases only a brief stopover allowed Calipari to have may be legal under NCAA rules, but I question the 77. ethics of it.

I wasn't in favor of letting Cuonzo get away, but I like Barnes. He's also refreshing when it comes to press conferences and postgame comments. With him, it's not coach speak.

Super Bowl LI Preview

By Alex Norman

It's hard to believe, but there was a time in the world of American sports when the Super Bowl not only failed to be at the top in terms of interest from the public, but it didn't even exist.

This marks the 51st year that the Super Bowl has been a thing. It originally was called the AFL-NFL World Championship for the first 4 games before officially taking on the Super Bowl moniker when the merger screened in porch. They got a great deal!

This year the big game matches the evil empire known as the New England Patriots against the relative upstart Atlanta Falcons. For the Patriots, this is old hat. On Sunday they'll play in the Super Bowl for the 8th time in team history, and hope to win their 5th Lombardi Trophy. The Falcons are only making their second Super Bowl appearance, and have yet to win a Lombardi Trophy.

The Patriots feature arguably the greatest quarterback in NFL history, Tom Brady. With a win on Sunday he will have five Super Bowl trophies on his mantle. No quarterback has ever won more than four, a mark he shares with Joe Montana and Terry Bradshaw. He missed the first four games of the season while serving a suspension for his role in "Deflategate," arguably the dumbest investigation in NFL history.

He got hammered for (possibly? maybe? kind of?) being involved in a sinister plot to reduce the inflation levels of footballs. Of course, NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell wouldn't have brought a sledge hammer to punish an ant had the NFL done its job properly during the famous "Spygate" controversy of the 2000s, when the Patriots were caught illegally taping their opponent's signals. Goodell famously destroyed the tapes, forever leaving conspiracy theorists to believe there was much more evidence that Goodell ignored to help his friend, Patriots owner Bob Kraft. So now Goodell is Public Enemy #1 in Boston, and Patriots fans would like nothing better than to see Goodell hand the Lombardi Trophy to Kraft.

The Patriots have a good defense. which includes a former Tennessee

Vol, cornerback Justin Coleman. But they go as far as Brady will take them. His receivers don't look like anything special, but Julian Edelman and converted lacrosse player Chris Hogan have been solid this postseason. Running backs Dion Lewis and LeGarrette Blount can be very effective. The offense hasn't missed a beat, even though "bro" Rob Gronkowski, perhaps the best tight end in football, is out for the season due to injury.

New England is a slight favorite in this game according to the people in Las Vegas in those pretty, tall buildings.

But don't count out the Atlanta Falcons. They have an offense that will be able to match the Patriots, thanks mostly to the emergence of quarterback Matt Ryan. He's had a very good career, but this has been his best season yet, which could lead to Ryan has thrown for 730 yards and 7 touchdowns in the Falcons two postseason wins, and Atlanta has averaged 40 points per contest. Wide receiver Julio Jones has been almost unstoppable. Running backs Tevin Coleman and Devonta Freeman are a solid one-two punch as well. And the defense is aggressive. If they can hit Tom Brady the way they did Green Bay's Aaron Rodgers in the NFC title game, Atlanta has a good shot at a victory.

With the exception of a fluky one point loss to Kansas City when former Vol Eric Berry scored on a late game INT return two point conversion, the Falcons haven't dropped a game since mid-November. This is a team playing with tremendous confidence.

This all said the way both offenses are playing; it wouldn't be a surprise to see a lot of points scored in this one. And no matter the result, try to enjoy the game, because it is the last "real" football any of us will see until August.

"We're going to go down there and we're going to wrestle," he said. "We have some young guys going down there. But that is what it is, so we're going to go down there and we're going down there to compete."

a weekly column by Dr. Jim Ferguson

Reflections

I can honestly say I had opinions. never watched a Presidential inauguration until January 20, 2017. I guess it was because I was always working. My son-in-law said he first watched an inauguration in grammar school. When I was coming up TVs were a rarity in school.

In those days we learned about daily events through newspapers or the nightly news. We believed Walter Cronkite, but now we know there is fake and politicized news and has been so as long as people have been reporting. Given the reality of things, I believe it would be dangerous to accept one source of facts. There are multiple perspectives on any event, and because there is 24 hour cable news and talk-radio along with newspapers, the internet and the Networks, we are provided multiple per-

There weren't smart phones with news apps when Becky and I stayed up late in 1969 to watch Neil Armstrong step onto the moon. I remember learning of the 9-11 terrorist attack in 2001 as I moved to the next examination room in my office. And I only heard of the Challenger disaster when I came home late that evening and Becky informed me. Today I would have learned of such events with news flashes on my smartphone, which incidentally has more computing capacity than the computers on Apollo 11.

These days the pace of life and change is breathtaking. At times I've been critical of the blather and pundits necessary to fill the 24 hour news cycle, but I can periodically disengage from the TV and turn off spectives from which we alerts on my iPhone if I need should then make our own a rest. Orwell's novel 1984 shows what can happen when facts and "news" become indoctrination. I do think that people walking or driving around with their face in their smart phones is dangerous and not conducive to human conversation and civility. I've seen couples having dinner in a restaurant with their noses buried in their smart phones. At the risk of being crude, surfing the Net "together" is not foreplay.

These days I find myself checking my news apps regularly because so much is happening. Obama largely governed by executive order rather than through legislation. Trump is now in the process of dismantling eight years of executive orders. Revolutionary shifts have already begun in Trump's first week as President. There have been changes on immigration policy, the wall and border security, sanctuary city issues, a ban on Federal funds to support international abortion, cancelling the TPP, a hiring freeze of some Federal workers, authorization of the Keystone and Dakota pipelines, announcement of election fraud investigation by the DOJ and revisions of Obama-care. Trump has more energy than me. Just following what he's up to wears me out.

A friend of mine has close all over the United States. He tells me that the mood of border security agents and ICE is ecstatic over Trump cancelling Obama's "Catch and Release" policy. The Stock Market is booming with the DOW braking 20,000. The unions met with Trump and have switched teams, abandoning their traditional support of Democrats. Industry kingpins are bullish and plan to make products in the US rather than abroad as complicated and onerous regulations are lifted. I read last year that American companies have been "sitting" on $8 trillion in capital which is available for investment in a friendlier business climate. A TV business pundit said it best, "The American spirit has been imprisoned for eight years under Obama." The spirit has been liber-

Obviously, not everyone is happy with the country's new direction and leader. In a recent essay I introduced the notion of a fourth branch of government, defined as ensconced workers in the vast Washington bureaucracy who transcend any administration change. "A fifth column is any group of people who undermines a larger group - such as a nation or a besieged city." The term has its origin in the foul mouthed Madonna connections with sheriffs the 1936 Spanish Civil War. A Nationalist (Fascist) general boasted he had "four columns of troops" converging on the Republican (socialist) city of Madrid, as well as a "Quinta columna," a fifth column of supporters within the city. I suspect our own government is full of Lois Lerners who view Trump's statements of reducing government and hiring freezes with alarm and resistance.

> Last weekend several million women marched in opposition to what they perceive as Trump's prolife perspective. Most of these rallies were peaceful and I believe the ladies were sincere. The exceptions were the professional rioters arrested in Washington DC who face up to ten years in prison. I'm certainly not a policy wonk, but I've not heard of any Trump policy threatening women's rights. He did stop Federal money being used to fund international abortions. Perhaps the mere mention that Trump considers himself pro-life is enough to make some women march. However, Piers Morgan, former CNN host and a self-described liberal, said the march in Washington DC, was "not about women's rights, but about Trump hatred." After listening to speeches by and the "vile, crude, violent, nasty and man-hating" Ashley Judd, Morgan may have a point.

Lastly, the ruling class of Washington, the Democrats and their media accomplices are opposed to Trump and the new order. The status quo has been good for business for the connected and powerful. It's called crony capitalism and banking. Lobbyists peddle influence and buy politicians, and government workers are assured high paying government jobs while Main Street dies. The fictional capitol Panem of The Hunger Games aptly describes the elitist Washington DC cabal.

Those in power and those who thrive on their coat tails will not take kindly to someone whose goal is to change course and take their power, drain their swamp and change the culture of a broken system.

Trump may not be a student of the Bible, but he should know that "our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the the authorities, against the powers and against the forces of evil" (Ephesians

I hope he understands what he's up against.
