Board of Education Approves Two Superintendent Candidates

By Pete Gawda

With little discussion at their meeting on Wednesday evening the Knox Amber Rountree said the County Board of Education readily approved Knox County Assistant Superintendent Bob Thomas and current Hamblen County Superintendent Dale Lynch for consideration for superintendent. But it seems some board members felt

Closing of Lovelace Road Denied

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

What began as a plea from residents near the end of Lovelace Road, which dead-ends at Melton Hill Lake, ended last week when the Knox County Commission voted unanimously to leave the narrow road open to the public.

Some residents have complained about illegal behavior and disturbances near the end of the road. Other area residents said they needed the road to remain open so they could access the lake and launch their boats. If closed the nearest boat launch would have been miles away from the neighborhood.

The requested closure, some 1300 feet of road before its ending at the lake, was denied primarily because the Tennessee Valley Authority owns the adjacent land and probably half of the roadway.

Commissioner Brad Anders

Commissioner Hugh Nystrom vertically with a red bar across noted that TVA would have to approve any closure of the route.

State Bills

The commissioners also discussed several pieces of legislation that are being introduced in the state house and senate.

Commissioner Charles Busler mentioned a bill regulating Bed and Breakfast lodging that would prohibit local governments from taxing that growing temporary lodging business.

"The state wants to control it and it should be local zoning in our own county," Busler said.

Commissioner John Schoonmaker said that Senator Becky Duncan Massey has a bill that would require a special Red Bar imprinted differently on driver licenses issued to people too young to buy beer. Massey's bill would require under-age drivers the edge. Schoonmaker also complained that the current Presidential Primary ballots used in Knox County should have the party candidates first, all the other candidates below that and the selection of presidential convention delegates at the bottom. Schoonmaker suggested that some people may not want to select delegates.

Chairman David Wright noted that Senator Richard Briggs has introduced a bill that would create a Domestic Abuse Magistrate for Knox County.

The Manor

Teresa Lawson, Supportive Services Coordinator for The Manor at Northgate, spoke to the county commission last week about affordable independent living for disadvantaged senior citizens. The Manor at Northgate is unique to Knox County in that the "high rise" apartment complex at 4301 Whittle Springs Road supplies living for seniors 60 and older who cannot afford to live elsewhere. Lawson said The Manor, part of KCDC housing, is the only such program in the state.

She said that more than 10,000 people will turn 65 every day and that although the facility only charges 30% of an individual's monthly income, some residents can't afford that "I just want to make sure you are aware of us and don't forget about us," Lawson said.

Commissioner Michelle Carringer recognized The Manor's effort and said that several other groups, including the North Knoxville Business and Professional Association, help out there.

School system announces proposed rezoning plan

By Pete Gawda

The long-awaited preliminary school rezoning plan is now available for public comment. Not only does the plan set attendance zones for the new Hardin Valley and Gibbs middle schools, it also adjusts the zones for Farragut, Karns, Holston, Carter, Vine and South-Doyle Middle Schools.

At least two school board members expressed approval of the proposed rezoning shortly after it was announced.

"It is clear Knox County Schools made a good faith effort to listen to the people," was the opinion of Terry Hill, whose district includes Ball Camp Elementary School, Hardin Valley Elementary School and Hardin Valley Academy.

Gloria Deathridge, whose district includes Holston Middle School and Vine Middle Magnet, said she has received no negative comments on the proposed zoning. She was especially pleased that some long bus rides have been eliminated.

The new Hardin Valley Middle School zone would include all of the existing Hardin Valley Elementary zone and a portion of Ball Camp Elementary zone east of Pellisippi Parkway and north of Lovell Road. It would also include all the current Farragut Middle School zone north of I-40, west of Pellisippi Parkway, north of Kingston Pike and east of Lovell Road. The new Hardin Valley Middle School would have an estimated enrollment of 850. Farragut Middle School enrollment is projected to drop from 1,436 to 1,300. About 500 students in the current Gibbs and Corryton Elementary School zones would go to the new Gibbs Middle School.

One of the major concerns expressed by parents at the public forums, students crossing a river twice daily on school buses, was addressed.

Most students who live north of the Tennessee River and are currently zoned to South-Doyle Middle would be rezoned to attend Vine Middle School. Parts of the current Carter and Holston Middle School zones would also be rezoned to

Thomas and Lynch are finalists for superintendent

At their meeting last Tuesday morning the superintendent search committee narrowed the list of applicants for Knox County Superintendent of Schools down to Bob Thomas, currently assistant Knox County superintendent and Dale Lynch, currently superintendent of schools for Hamblen County in Morristown. These two names were to be presented to the board of education at their meeting on March 1st. Assuming both nominees are approved at that meeting, one of them will be elected Knox County Superintendent of Schools at a special meeting at 3 p.m.

While the committee members were in agreement as to the top two candidates, the other local candidate, Jon Rysewyk, interim chief academic officer for Knox County Schools came in a strong third. However committee members felt he was doing a great job in his present position and should remain there.

"He understands people in the system," Tony Norman said of Thomas. "The breadth of his experience is stun-

Superintendent search committee defends its actions

By Pete Gawda

Things got lively at last made public. Monday's work session of Education as the superintensession, the interim superintendent announced the completion of the preliminary rezoning report.

The superintendent search committee took some heat from other board members for not having a definite rating system or rubric to select superintendent candidates. Committee Chair Amber Rountree said she is hesitant to constrain board members to a rubric. She said the intangibles are often what defines a superintendent and added that at the previous week's meeting, committee members discussed the key areas they would focus on. She is looking for a "servant leader." Gary Dupler, deputy law director, warned that the information from the psychological testing administered to the applicants cannot be divulged in a rubric system which would have to be she added.

She wondered how the process could be transparent if the board members did not know the weight the committee members put on each item used to evaluate applicants. She noted that if a search organization were used, they would know the rubric used.

Rountree said her committee went through the list and had lengthy discussions about the good traits of each applicant. She said a rubric would muddy the waters. "I think we acted in good faith,"

"We just basically agreed Board member Mike on everything," asserted committee member Tony "We are going to agree to bers to evaluating traits. "I think the public expects a little bit more out of something as important as this." Susan Horn, another member of the committee, reminded the board that they did not want a number attached to teacher evaluations. By the same reasoning she was not in favor of a numbered ranking system for superintendent appli-

"It doesn't matter if you make a rubric or not," said Norman. "It is still a subjective process. This is a judgment call. I trust this board in total to make the right judgment." Board member Patti Bounds offered the opinion that it was unfair to ask the committee at this late date to develop a rubric.

Turning to other matters, Interim Superintendent Buzz

Thomas announced, without going into detail, that the preliminary rezoning plan was completed and is available at knoxschools.org.

"We were very intentional and doing what they asked."

Thomas thanked Russ Oaks, chief operating officer, and Rick Grubb, administration director, for the tremendous job they did on this project. Thomas also announced that Pre-K applications will be available March 1 and those applications could be turned in during Pre-K round ups at selected school sites

April 3 to 11. Fugate informed the meeting of the board policy on dress codes that she was proposing to revise. She was offering revisions that would ensure the policy was equally enforced for boys as well as girls and that facility and staff are held to the same standard of dress. The policy change was scheduled for its first reading at the school board meeting on March 1.

Governor Haslam's 33% Gas Tax Hike Diesel fuel tax would increase 70%

By Steve Hunley, Publisher publisher@knoxfocus.com

As you've read here many times, the Knoxville News Sentinel is utterly predictable. The News Sentinel has never seen a new tax or an existing tax increase that they didn't like. So, the Sentinel surprised no one when it proclaimed Governor Bill Haslam's proposal to increase the gasoline tax was "reasonable" and "huge."

As we all know, there are numerous groups asking the legislature for more and more money every year. If all of this was not bad enough, the

The proposed tax increase for diesel fuel is more than 70%. other things. There's not Unfortunately, that's not the worst aspect of the proposed gas tax hikes. The governor, and this is certainly "bold," proposes to link the tax hike to the Consumer Price Index, which means it could go up every year. None that I know of. the When inflation goes up, our dollars buy less, so the governor proposes to hook a tax to an index that is surely to rise. Wow! Theoretically, the index could go down, but that's about as likely as Hillary speaking fee.

This year Tennessee is projected to have a surplus of about $2 billion and President Donald Trump is proposing to spend $1

Tennessean, hailed the sales tax, the property did, but what it really introduced an alternative from 5% to 4.5%. Basically, the tax will on some pending road of milk, bread, food, and there are a few other household goods. What legislators sponsoring paycheck. How many in Nashville. It seems prudent to wait and see what, if anything, President and Congress might do and what Tennessee's share might amount to before attaching a higher tax to a kite and seeing how high it can fly.

The argument that we should increase fuel taxes Clinton turning down a because they hadn't been raised since 1989 is odd to me. In my opinion, simply because a tax hasn't been raised in a while, doesn't that mean it's time to raise it again. At the same time, trillion on infrastructure the governor proposes across the country. State some very modest tax "fair." Another Gannett to allow city and county the tax to "keep up with Representative Jason cuts, including a reduction newspaper, the Nashville governments to raise the inflation," as the Sentinel Zachary has already in the sales tax on food cut to the same extent you feel the increase in the gasoline tax? Nor do any of us believe that gasoline will remain at its current relatively low price. It never does and many of us can easily recall when it was approaching $5.00 per gallon. Furthermore, the 70% tax increase on diesel fuel will increase the cost of transporting goods, which in turn always increases the cost of those same goods to consumers.

Indexing a tax is a truly terrible idea; imagine if your mortgage payment or rent was indexed, how long do you suppose you'd have a place to live?

If you think the governor's gas tax hike is a bad idea, you can find and contact your legislators at capitol.tn.gov.

Are fines for illegal sales to minors too low?

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Are the fines for selling beer to minors in Knoxville too low?

Rob Frost, city council attorney, is looking at surrounding counties and comparing fines and will report back to the Knoxville Beer Board with his findings.

The city is also looking at requiring a "plan of action" by beer permit applicants that would be a checklist of how to check a driver's license.

It is a continuing and growing problem in both the city and the county as both jurisdictions look for ways to curb the illegal sales. During the city's beer board meeting Tuesday Chairwoman Brenda Palmer told The Focus that it is surprising that many of the violations occur inside restaurants. While many are at convenience stores, a large number are not.

Some of the illegal sales over the past few months have occurred at places like Bonefish Grill, Applebee's, Bistro by the Tracks and Bravo Cucina Italiana. Those restaurants appeared before the board last week to report their progress.

A spokesman for Applebee's said the employee that sold the beer to a minor had 23 years as an employee law in the city fines the on Central Avenue Pike owner of the business and not the employee.

Another restaurant owner reported that a 48-day suspension and a fine resulted in a loss of $38,000 in sales and a 25% downturn in overall business.

New applicants for a beer permit included the Dogwoods Arts Festival, East Tennessee Kidney Foundation, Merchants of Beer, Pinnacle Theatre, the Clarion Hotel, The Plaid Apron and Beer, Bourbon and Barbeque. The Clarion applicant asked for a postponement on the application explaining that the company has but was fired. The current purchased the Days Inn and is remodeling and adding a restaurant. Pour Tap Room's application for self-serve beer was deferred until the board's March 28th meeting. Attorney Frost said the city is meeting with the proposed pub to "craft an ordinance" and added that Police Chief David Rausch is involved in the reviewing of new rules to permit or limit how customers may draw their own beer.

"We hope to have something in the next two weeks," Frost said. "Our goal is to have something the board, the police department and the law department can live with."

Safety Center Opponents Fill Meeting

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

It has been a long and bumpy road but as the idea of a Safety Center for mentally ill public offenders is within site there's another obstacle: community reaction.

With $1.5 million for each of two years that may be coming to Knox County from the state, a county and city commitment for funding, and a facility already selected for a Behavior Health Urgent Care Center just off Western Avenue at 3343 Dewine Road, community objection appears to be growing.

The Public Hearing on the issue Thursday evening continued to see strong questions and objection from many neighborhood residents. Some accused the county, city, sheriff's department and attorney general of trying to "shame them" into accepting the facility.

Despite reassurances from the sheriff's office and the director of Helen Ross McNabb Center that clients would be taken to and from there by officers and not released during a three-day stay, residents were not satisfied.

The repeated complaint is that the "Safety Center" isn't suitable for a residential neighborhood. The proponents are supporting converting a former church, next to the McNabb Center just off Western Avenue. McNabb Center Director Jerry Vagnier, Sheriff J. J. Jones, District Attorney General Charme Allen, Knox County Mayor Tim Burchett and Knoxville Deputy Mayor Bill Lyons all addressed a packed meeting at Cumberland Baptist Church on Western Avenue. The idea was to explain the proposed facility, how non-violent offenders would be processed and housed, and to ease fears of the surrounding neighbors. The sheriff told the audience that none of the patients, when discharged, would be released at the facility but would be taken "downtown" or to their family homes to be released.

The public comment session got aggressive and loud at times, one resident interrupting a women who Dailey during the Safety Center hearing. Brown, a long supporter of a treatment facility, spearheaded a committee to promote creation of the center.

supports the facility and there were charges that the public meetings were heavy-handed and a "slap in the face."

When the attorney general spoke about who would be admitted to the facility she was questioned about other violent offenders who might be housed there for the three day detox period. She said that families or courts could place offenders there while normally law enforcement officers would decide if a person should be admitted.

She said that most patients in the proposed 24 bed facility would be low level misdemeanor offenders, such as pan handlers. She also said that people referred to the center after family charges against them would be reviewed before being admitted or turned down.

Vagnier said the McNabb Center there already houses 40 volunteer patients in the current facility and said the new facility, which could take up to $2 million to completely renovate, would be totally secure. He also said that the McNabb Center will be asking the Metropolitan Planning Commission for a "Use on Review" decision to permit the detox center.

The Sheriff's Department is also planning to house a Sheriff's Substation at the location.

Several citizens questioned if a three-day stay could adequately treat drug or alcohol addiction and Vagnier said that the program would include discharge plans that would include case management to get people back in their community, working with other agencies and organizations and help with permanent housing. Families of the patients could also visit and get included in the treatment.

Some local residents suggested other locations for the facility including the former St. Mary's Hospital or other available locations closer to downtown Knoxville.

Vivian Shipe, a long-time proponent of such a treatment center, related a story about a family member who, after repeatedly being arrested, final got treatment and has rejoined soci-

Questioned about an age limit for patients there Vagnier said the facility would be for adults only. He said there is a "tremendous need" in the community for teen addiction but there is no facility to treat them.

The Knoxville Trolley was parked in front of the City-County Building when I boarded one morning to find that I was the only passenger. The driver, who simply identified herself as Lilly, walked behind the Trolley and asked an illegal parker there to move along. She pulled onto Main Street and turned left on Gay, passing the iconic businesses there in the theatre district. One passenger got on and we rolled on to take a right on Summit and down to Central.

We passed the unique old diner there, soon to be the home of a brewery, and then through the Old City. That early in the morning few of the businesses were open and no one exited or entered the Lilly pulled off at one point, to wait for her schedule to catch up, under the interstate bridge at the Old City parking lot. Then she resumed her drive back through the Old City and up Summit, where a few other passengers boarded. By then there were about five passengers.

She turned right, up the hill, and wound her way to Summit Towers. Changes in transit routes cut back on quarterly-hour stops at the apartment complex and some had complained about that action. A shelter for those residents has been promised and a stop downhill at Summit proposed, but thus far nothing has been done.

The half-dozen residents waiting for the trolley there were mostly elderly, with one man in a motorized wheel chair.

"You're going to have to move," she said, asking two of us to make way for the wheelchair. She dropped the lift and he drove the wheelchair into position, where Lilly trapped the chair in

Once aboard, he told the driver that getting to the trolley from the towers was difficult because someone had cut a ditch there.

She chatted with him briefly and drove back down the winding street to Summit Hill Drive. A few people exited the trolley and she turned left on Locust Street, past the UT Conference Center and continued on to Main. Turning left there and preparing to complete her 20-minute route she had to honk at another private car parked in the trolley and bus slots in front of the City-County

As half a dozen passengers left, I went to her and told her she did a great job with the route and the care of her passengers. She seemed embarrassed.

The notable part of the trip that stood out to me was the absence of passengers on the way to the Old City and the number of people who boarded at Summit Towers. The morning was damp from an overnight rain and I could imagine those elderly people standing and waiting without a shelter.

Last week in Nashville, House members moved forward with legislation to provide additional support to East Tennessee families that had property damaged by wildfires that swept through Sevier County and surrounding areas last November. The bill calls for prorating the 2016 tax assessment for a homeowner's real property or a business owner's personal property, if it sustained damage from the Federal Emergency Management Agency certified disaster area last year. If the tax computed for the 2016 tax year has already been paid by the property owner prior to proration, he or she would receive a refund under the new law. On Tuesday, Governor Haslam announced that South Korean appliance maker LG Electronics Inc. has selected a location near Clarksville, TN to open their first washing machine factory in the United States. The $250 million, 800,000+ square-foot manufacturing facility is expected to bring over 500 jobs in its first phase alone. By 2019, the company plans to manufacture the vast majority of their home washing appliances for their U.S. market at the new Montgomery County location. Tuesday's formal announcement further cements Tennessee's growing business partnership with South Korea.

Also on Tuesday, the General Assembly joined the Red Cross in hosting a blood drive at the Legislative Plaza. While my schedule prevented me from donating, members of my staff were able to contribute to the great work the Red Cross is doing in our state and around the world. A single donation can save up to three lives, and the need is constant. I would like to encourage everyone

City Council

Boutique for Fountain City denied

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

An appeal by a Fountain City couple, Danny and Kelli Jobe, to rezone a home at 105 Forestal Drive was turned down Tuesday in a vote by the Knoxville City

The Jobes appeared before the council and said that the wife has operated a beauty salon in Fountain City for 16 years and the shop has outgrown its space and needs the home to operate a boutique. Their request before the planning commission was denied and they were turning to the council for help. Kelli Jobe told the council the small home has been empty for more than 10 years and is almost surrounded by commercial property. In order to have the MPC decision overturned the One Year Plan there would need to be changed but if denied, which it was, the couple's request to change from a Residential (R-2) zone to a Commercial (C-3) had to be approved.

The council voted unanimously to deny the change although the Jobes said they had the signatures of all but one neighbor and from all the commercial businesses nearby.

Two Fountain City Towne Hall members spoke against the change. Carlene Malone cited three reasons why the request should be denied including that the change would "destabilize the entire block." She also said that affordable housing is needed in the neighborhood.

Charlotte Davis said allowing a business there would create "a domino effect.".

Kelli Jobe said she would compromise for a C-1 zone instead of a C-3 but that suggestion wasn't considered.

Councilman Nick Della Volpe said the decision was "a tough one" and although the house was next door to commercial property, a change would be "chipping away at a residential neighborhood." He said that the council needed to stick to in this country's existence, things turned upside Black became white, became down, and lies became alternative truths. The last one listed something with which all of us have entire time that the child lived and in which we have participated during our lifetimes.

Most of us grew up in households where lying was a major offense by a child. Moms and dads taught us to tell the truth at all times. Some children learned that the road to hell was paved with lies by young folks. In short, we were scared to death to tell a lie and shivered with fear if we were joerector@comcast.net

If a child told a whopper and by his parents, punishments were horrific. Sometimes, a parent would reward a lie by administering a spanking. The ran in a circle to avoid the swats to his fanny, he was regretting the way he distorted the truth. The pain from the spanking paled in comparison to the little one's embarrassment over having lied or having lost his parent's trust.

On some occasions, moms decided to clean up the lying mouths of their offspring. They marched the offenders to the bathroom and stationed them by the sink. Washrags were soaked with water, and then was caught then Dial soap was lathered to the surfaces. With rags filled with suds, moms demanded their children to open their mouths, and they proceeded to wash teeth, gums, and tongues in symbolic gestures of removing the untruths from the mouths of babes. The after-taste often was enough to set tiny stomachs on edge to the point of throwing up. It also stopped the lying, at least until the memory of the terrible taste imprisonment, tensions ran high; children were angry for being stuck at home without friends, television, radio, or computers; parents were miserable as they endured the whining and fit throwing by their children. The hope was that young people would think twice before lying so that they could return to their lives and spare parents of any more agony. Perhaps the worst punishment for lying was the parental lecture. A guilty child was summoned before his parents and quizzed about his reasons for lying. After a half dozen statements of "I don't know," mom and dad tagteamed and talked to the young person. Preaching might have been a better term for what took place, and invariably, at some them to constituents withpoint in this long-winded speech came the most dreaded line of all: "We are disappointed in you." The offender had no comeback for it, and parents never let him know when and if the disappointment ended. A quick beating was preferable to the lecture because although it hurt, the whole matter was over and done in short order. Most of us learned our lessons about lying, not that we stopped doing it, but we did a better job of not getting caught. However, some folks never have gotten the hang of lying. They continue to tell outrageous tales and profess that those fabrications are true.

Folks in the government are most proficient in lying. Politicians peddle loads of out blinking an eye. The most infuriating thing is they think all of us believe the lies they tell. The truth is that some of us actually have working minds that have built-in "BS" detectors; we recognize when a person is shoveling loads of it in an attempt to pervert the truth.

Lying sometimes is acceptable, such as when doing so spares another's feelings. The majority of the time, however, fibs aren't necessary. The truth serves us better in the long run. Everyone, especially our leaders, should work to end the intentionally false statements that are presented as gospel. It's just not worthwhile in the long

On Wednesday, HB0534, the gas tax bill included in Governor Haslam's Improve Act, was voted on in the House Transportation Subcommittee. The subcommittee voted to pass the bill on to the full committee, but not before adding two significant amendments. Amendment 004087 cuts out the source of the new Highway Fund revenue from an increase on gasoline and diesel taxes and instead would use a percentage of the existing state sales tax revenue. This idea was borrowed from Representative Hawk's bill as an alternative to the Governor's plan. Another amendment was adopted, Amendment 004082, to remove a component of the Governor's plan that tied the increased gas and diesel taxes to the Consumer Price Index. I am looking forward to hearing the continued debate on this issue over the coming weeks.

As a state representative, a large portion of my time at the Capitol is spent in committee meetings, session, and meeting with constituents and Tennesseans from all over the state. I typically meet with over fifty individuals and organizations each week, and I enjoy speaking with every one of them. This week I met with Alzheimer's Tennessee, the East Tennessee Human Resources Agency, the Presidents of Middle Tennessee State University and South College, and the Tennessee Association of Nurse Anesthetists, to name a few. Meeting with these groups and individuals provides me with valuable information and insight and ultimately allows me to be a better legislator.

Local Airbnb regulation may be stopped

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The temporary leasing of a room or rooms in private homes, commonly using firms like Airbnb and Home Away, is a growing industry across the nation. Most commonly these lodgings host visitors temporarily, especially during festival and special events.

In Knox County both the county commission and the city council are looking at ways to regulate and tax that service, similar to the occupancy taxes charged by hotels and motels and paid to the jurisdictions.

Both local plans may be killed by actions of the state legislature if a proposal before the state legislature passes. A Nashville ordinance, which would tax homeowners renting rooms similar to hotels, has been ruled unconstitutional.

House Bill 1020, introduced by Cameron Sexton of Crossville, and Senate Bill 10372, introduced by Senator Doug Overbey, would regulate the rentals only concerning public health and safety, shutting jurisdictions out of any revenue source. The City has been looking to regulate the growing industry through zoning regulations.

Tennessee and American Neutrality

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

1939 Franklin

Delano Roosevelt was fast approaching perhaps the biggest crisis of his presidency, aside from the Great Depression, with war looming in Europe. Roosevelt turned to his Secretary of State, Cordell Hull of Tennessee. Tall, stately, dignified and reserved, if not actually austere, Cordell Hull looked like a statesman, but Hull shared some notable characteristics with his one-time colleague, the peppery Senator Kenneth D. McKellar. Although Hull may well have had the appearance and outward demeanor of an early "Christian martyr" as Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes once grumbled, the Tennessean could be quite vindictive and held a grudge certainly as well as Senator McKellar. Perhaps it was not surprising that Cordell Hull would go to extraordinary lengths to settle a grudge with an enemy considering that his father had once hunted down a man who left him for dead and killed him. Like McKellar, Cordell Hull was an expert feudist. Despite his saintly appearance and soft-spoken nature, Hull was well known in Washington, D. C. for his ability to curse magnificently and his language caused some Capitol veterans to blush. Hull's tongue lashing of the Japanese diplomats, riddled with powerful profanity, who had the misfortune to be in Pearl Harbor, is legendary. Cordell Hull symbolized the rugged character of his old Fourth Congressional district in Tennessee. Like K. D. McKellar, Cordell Hull prized loyalty in others and returned it in kind. Also like McKellar, Hull could be blunt. Unlike Senator vated his public image. Cordell Hull was a highly respected member of Congress long before anybody knew who Franklin Roosevelt was; Hull was first elected to Congress in 1906, winning the Democratic nomination by less than twenty votes. Reelected easily until 1920 when he was taken under by the national Republican landslide (the same year FDR was the Democratic candidate for vice president), Hull triumphantly returned to Congress in 1922 by whipping the tar out of the luckless incumbent GOP congressman. Hull's prestige was such that he was elected Chairman of the Democratic National Committee after the party's disastrous drubbing in 1920. Hull remained in office as Chairman of the Democratic National Committee until his resignation in 1924. In spite of a devastating defeat in the 1924 presidential election,

McKellar, Cordell Hull care-

Hull did manage to help Democrats improve their numbers in lesser offices, as well as eradicate a crushing debt. Cordell Hull was elected to the United States Senate in 1930 and served for two years before he was tapped by President-Elect Franklin Roosevelt to serve as Secretary of State. Hull was somewhat reluctant to accept the post, worrying about the financial obligations carried by a Secretary of State, not to mention his wife, of his leaving the Senate. Known as an expert in the fields of taxation and tariffs, Cordell Hull had not been especially interested in foreign policy, which made his appointment seem odd to a number of people. Those who knew Franklin Roosevelt believed his choice of Cordell Hull signaled his desire to direct his own foreign policy. FDR also knew that Hull was admired and respected by most members of Congress, which could do nothing but help passed.

While

President

Roosevelt did his best to reassure a frightened pop-

Depression and tinkered with a faltering economy, Cordell Hull was busy initiating the "Good Neighbor" policy with Latin America. Most Americans were prein 1933; that was the year Adolf Hitler became Chancellor of Germany. Hitler proceeded to consolidate his power inside Germany and by the time FDR was overwhelmingly reelected to a second term in 1936, the German dictator was easily recognizable as a threat to the peace in Europe. Another threat to peace in the world was the Empire of Japan, which had gone to war with China in 1931 over a contrived incident designed to give the Japanese an excuse to begin hostilities. A Japanese lieutenant had planted a charge of dynamite to blow up railroad tracks, which were owned by a Japanese company. The blame for the explosion, which did little real damage, was the excuse needed for Japan to seize the Chinese province of Manchuria in 1931. Renamed Manchukuo by the Japanese, the last Emperor of china, Puyi, was installed as the puppet ruler of the province. Puyi was crowned Emperor of Manchukou in 1934, a title he retained until the end of World War

Frances, disliked the idea Hitler and Mussolini was the response of the democracies who did little more than denounce Japan for the invasion of China. By 1937, the Japanese were once again at war with China. Italy had invaded Ethiopia in 1935 and fully occupied the country by May of 1936. By 1938 Adolf Hitler had swallowed the whole of Austria in a relatively bloodless coup and threatened war over Czechoslovakia, necessitating the infamous Munich conference. The prime ministers of Great him get difficult legislation Britain and France met with Hitler and Mussolini and gave in to the German dictator's demands for a slice of the Czech Republic, which had been carved out of the German Empire ruled by Kaiser Wilhelm II after World War I. Great Britain and France declared war on Germany. Even with the outbreak of war in in Europe, a majority of Americans believed it was not a concern for the United States. Most Americans worried more about prosperity and putting their lives back togeth-

> and proclaim there would er after the Depression. Many of the most talented and able members of Congress were firm advocates of American nonintervention, irrespective of political party. Nor was isolationism confined to any one political viewpoint; in fact, most isolationists in Congress were progressives or liberals. Hiram Johnson, a famously progressive governor of California, had first come to the Senate in 1916 and had once been Theodore II, but he remained only a Roosevelt's running mate on the Progressive or "Bull Moose" party label. Known for putting his principles well above politics, Johnson, according to one British scholar reporting to the Foreign Office, was an "implacable and uncompromising isolationist" who had bitterly fought President Woodrow Wilson's dream of American entry into the League of Nations. The same British scholar summed up Senator Johnson's view of Europe as "a sink of iniquity" and warned Johnson's "prestige in Congress is still great and his parliamentary skill should not be underestimated." Johnson had refused to support President Herbert Hoover for reelection in 1932 and was openly for Franklin Roosevelt.

William E. Borah, the "Lion of Idaho", was another progressive Republican who had first come to the U. S. Senate in 1907 and had been a brilliant attorney. Borah was recognized by his colleagues as constitutional expert and was an orator of great capability, said to be one of the few his speeches. Borah had briefly considered challenging Herbert Hoover for the Republican presidential nomination in 1932, but discarded the idea when it became obvious he could not secure enough delegates to wrest the nomination from the incumbent. Borah had made a speech methodically attacking his own party's platform in 1932 and refused to endorse President Hoover. Like his friend Hiram Johnson, Senator Borah had been utterly opposed to American participation in the League of Nations. Borah was a genuine maverick, obstreperously independent who had been easily reelected over a serious challenger (the incumbent governor of Idaho) in 1936, when most of his colleagues had been defeated and consigned to the dustbin of history. A former Chairman of the Senate's Foreign Relations Committee and still the ranking Republican, Borah's was an important voice inside the United States Senate. Bennett Champ Clark was the son of the late Speaker of the House Champ Clark of Missouri. First elected to the Senate in 1932, Bennett Clark was an able and entertaining orator who thought fast on his feet. Clark was a master of ridicule, which he used effectively to berate his opponents. Isaiah Berlin, British scholar reporting back to Britain's Foreign Office on figures in the American Congress, described Clark as "a rabid isolationist" who had "steadily voted against all the foreign policies and war measures of the Administration with the exception of the reciprocal trade agreement (in which the corn exporters of Missouri have some interest)." Berlin assessed Bennett Clark as an "avowed Anglophobe." An able in-fighter despite his alcoholism, Senator Clark was an influential voice in American foreign policy, especially in the Midwest.

Robert LaFollette, like his friend Bennett Clark. the son of a famous father, Robert LaFollette, Sr. the progressive governor and U. S. senator from Wisconsin, was hardly the firebrand his father had been. "Young Bob" was also a progressive Republican who had refused to back President Herbert Hoover for reelection. LaFollette had supported Franklin Roosevelt and was identified as a Progressive, who had defeated both Republicans and Democrats to remain in the U.S. Senate. Burton K. Wheeler was a progressive Democrat from Montana who had bolted his own party in 1924 to run with the elder Bob LaFollette as a Progressive because he considered both the Republican and Democratic nominees as dangerously conservative. Considered so radical when he ran for governor of Montana in 1929, Wheeler had been labeled "Bolshevik Burt" by his opponents. Burton K. Wheeler was one of the few senators able to get under Franklin Roosevelt's skin, although he had been one of the first to support FDR's presidential candidacy.

Less respected inside the Senate than Wheeler, Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota was nonetheless highly voluble with a flair for attracting publicity to his favorite causes. Another progressive Republican who had bucked Herbert Hoover, Nye was described by Isaiah Berlin as "a notorious fire-eating Anglophobe

Isolationist" who possessed "some influence" inside the Republican caucus. Berlin accused the North Dakota senator of having "Fascist" connections and working closely with Senator Wheeler and Senator Bob Reynolds of North Carolina, the closest thing to an isolationist from the South in the Senate. Even after the neutrality debates, Nye continued to support nonintervention. In fact, Gerald Nye was speaking at an America First rally when he was literally presented with the news Pearl Harbor had been bombed by the Japanese. Henrik Shipstead, first elected to the Senate in 1922 as a Farmer-Laborite, was the son of Norwegian immigrants who still spoke with a slight Norwegian accent. A fiery orator and liberal who had been deeply opposed to the League of Nations, described by Isaiah Berlin ed, crotchety man..."

David I. Walsh, the first Irish Catholic Democrat to be elected governor and U.S. senator from Massachusetts, another formidable speaker who was hostile to the British Empire like many of his fellow Irishmen. A well-dressed bachelor, Walsh was Chairman of the Senate's Naval Affairs Committee.

The isolationist bloc in Congress was alert, articulate and powerful. President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell faced formidable opposition when they set out to revise the neutrality laws of the United States in 1939.

New open green space coming to S. Central Street

The rusted chain-link fence, topped with barbed wire, will be coming down soon. Later this month, look for a new linear green space, between James White Parkway and South Central Street, to be opened up.

Blountville, Tenn.-based South East Mowing will be removing the bedraggled old fence, dating back at least 30 years, that runs parallel to Central Street, next to the

The contractor will then install 1.900 linear feet of new 6-foottall black vinyl fencing. However, the new fence - minus any barbed wire - will be installed away from Central and closer to James White Parkway, creating a publicly-accessible open space that's more than 100 feet wide in spots.

South East Mowing, which mowed 29,000 miles of grass and installed fencing in four states last year, was the lowest bidder for the City's fence replacement project. The Central Street work will cost

"I hear from people all the time who look longingly at the shaded areas on the other side of a rickety rusted fence," said Rick Emmett, the City's Downtown Coordinator. "They're puzzled why the pretty pines, grassy areas and magnolias aren't accessible for public

"We agree with them. In a matter of weeks, this green space will be accessible to Central Street pedestrians, between the PetSafe Downtown Dog Park and the Romanian Church near Cumberland Avenue."

Going forward, Emmett said, the City will continue to consider suggestions from downtown residents and visitors about adding future amenities, such as benches or picnic tables, or possibly enlarging the downtown dog park.

I had only been writing a column for The Focus about four months. I wrote at night by lantern light that week in June and made trips to the library during the day to get the stories ready for publication in The Focus, finally finishing at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon!

THE NEW SEASON – REGION TOURNEY WRAP-UP

Knoxville Catholic's Luke Smith (left), the tournament MVP, and Brock Jancek are congratulated as they come out of the game in the Region 2-AA finals Thursday night at Austin-East High School. The Irishmen defeated CAK 59-31 to advance to tonight's sectional round.

Oak Ridge routs Lady Falcons loses a heartbreaker Lady Hawks to claim title

By Ken Lay

OAK RIDGE --- Hardin Valley Academy's girls basketball team made it to the Region 2-AAA Tournament Championship Game for the first time in school history Wednesday night.

But things didn't go well for the Lady Hawks at Wildcat Arena. HVA scored the first basket of the game but its offense was all but stifled for the rest of the frame in a 71-42 loss to Oak Ridge.

Paige Gentry gave Hardin Valley the lead with a 3-pointer to open the game but the Lady Wildcats responded by closing the first quarter on a 19-2 run as they forced Hardin Valley into multiple turnovers and surrendered only contested looks at the bucket.

"I think this being our first time in this ballgame was a factor," HVA coach Jennifer Galloway said after her team dropped to 23-9 with the loss. "Oak Ridge is a very good team and they played well tonight.

"They're a team that has the capability to go on runs and they did that tonight."

Oak Ridge (29-3) successfully defended its 2015-16 Region 2-AAA Title with Wednesday night's victory. The Lady Wildcats have won multiple region championships in their storied history. They claimed their latest in front of a spirited and partisan home crowd.

"We love playing at home in front of our crowd," Oak Ridge coach Paige Redman said.

Redman and her team may love to play in the friendly confines of Wildcat Arena, but on this night, the Lady Wildcats executed their defensive game plan flawlessly and were able to get open shots. Things might've been if Oak Ridge hadn't missed several layups.

"I just wish that we would've hit more of those layups," Redman said. "Our scout showed that if we came on and jumped on them, it would be effective and we knew that their guards would come out aggressive and they did. We gelled well tonight.

"It all starts with our defense and we played well on both offense and defense."

The coach got her answer as the Lady Wildcats scored the first 16 points of the third stanza and opened a 49-20 lead when Courtney Ellison knocked down a longrange jumper with 4:32 left in the third quarter.

Hardin Valley, which went nearly four minutes without a point, finally broke its scoring drought on a free throw by senior center Symphony Buxton.

Both teams played in state sectional games Saturday but results were not available at press time.

"Both teams are still worse for the Lady Hawks one game away from the state tournament," Galloway said.

The defeat, Fulton's fourth at the hands of Gatlinburg-Pittman this season, meant the Lady Falcons (26-6) would have to go on the road in the sectionals Saturday night at Grainger (25-7).

of Tennessee has thousands of fans scratching their heads again. And that's putting it mildly.

Only UT could find a way to hire a new athletic director and at the same time alienate one of its finest and most loyal head coaches of all time. Phillip Fulmer, a College Hall of Fame football coach, was only trying to help his alma mater when he made himself a candidate for the AD post.

When Dr. Beverly Davenport, UT's new chancellor, hired John Currie to be Tennessee's new athletic director last week, she was bringing back a person who worked with Mike Hamilton, the former AD who couldn't wait to end the Fulmer era in 2008. These are the kind of decisions you get when you put somebody in charge of a university who either has no knowledge of its past history or simply doesn't care. I never thought I would say wanted to see David Blackburn lead the UT athletics

Many of those fans also would have been delighted to see Fulmer come aboard as a No. 2 man in the department with Blackburn. Fulmer could have been a positive influence for a football program that is trying to get to the next level under Butch Jones. The beloved former head coach also could have been a great fund raiser as well as a public relations ambassador for a university that has longed for a strong leader to unite its fan base after so many years of frustration.

Davenport's biggest mistake was limiting the selection pool to only sitting athletic directors at Power 5 conference institutions. That this, but I believe UT eliminated Blackburn from (That includes bringing back consideration, even though he worked in athletic administration for two decades at UT and has been a highly successful AD at Chattanooga since 2013.

> Davenport came here from the University of Cincinnati. She had never before been a chancellor at a Power 5 conference institution. So why would she set such a requirement for AD applicants at Tennessee?

Blackburn, in my opinion, is just as qualified to be UT's athletic director as Currie, and maybe more so. Blackburn is more of a Tennessee guy, like the majority of fans wanted. David is from Loudon. John is from Chapel

Other than that, and the fact Currie has been the athletic director at Kansas State since he left UT in 2009, I don't know a lot about him. Well, except that he has two ears, two eyes and one mouth, so he plans on doing a lot of listening and watching before he makes any moves or changes at Tennessee.

the Lady Vols logo and nickname for all UT women's teams, which I thought would be a no-brainer).

I heard that spill three times in less than 24 hours, along with his other stock answers at the press conference, after he was introduced before a crowd of 200 at Thompson-Boling Arena Thursday afternoon.

And I was disappointed to hear, along with many of his former teammates, Peyton Manning was front and center in that crowd, giving his support to the new AD.

Could you imagine the size of the crowd at TBA if Blackburn had been the one introduced? Fulmer would have been there too, and maybe even standing beside him. That would have been too easy. That would have made more sense. UT, these days, always has to do things that are hard to understand and difficult to explain. No wonder its leaders often stay in hiding for weeks and months at a time.

John Currie gets the call, Vol Nation Flips Its Lid

By Alex Norman

Well, it finally happened. More than 6 months had passed since Tennessee athletics director Dave Hart announced that he would be retiring, leaving behind a legacy of Title IX problems, unnecessary lawsuits that cost the University millions, a coach vetting that would have been better done by a 12 year old with google, and pretty much the end of the most successful brand in women's athletics. But on February 28th, Tennessee announced that Hart's replacement had finally been hired. Lo and behold it was someone that actually had Tennessee ties!

Was it David Blackburn, the ultrapopular athletics director at UT-Chattanooga that had decades of experience at Tennessee?

Was it Phillip Fulmer, the national championship winning Tennessee football coach that had the support of Peyton Manning and big Vols boosters?

Was it Charles Davis, the former Tennessee football player and widely respected broadcaster?

New Tennessee Chancellor Beverly Davenport decided to hire Kansas State athletics director John Currie, a former associate athletic director and graduate from Tennessee.

In a statement release by the University of Tennessee, Davenport said, "This is truly an exciting day for the University of Tennessee and our athletics department. As I said when we began this process, we were looking for the best candidate, and we feel strongly that we have him in John Currie. John exemplifies all the qualities we were seeking in an athletics director. He is a man of high integrity, strong values, a progressive thinker, he fully understands the importance of being compliant in everything we do, and he is a leader who will put the well-being of our student-athletes above everything."

In that same statement, Currie said, "It is a very exciting time for my family and me as we return to a place that remains very special to us. We spent 10 years in Knoxville prior to taking the job at K-State, and I appreciate Chancellor Davenport and the University of Tennessee for providing us this special opportunity. As a graduate of the University of Tennessee, I know how much UT athletics means to the people in the state, and I look forward to serving all of the Big Orange Nation, its wonderful coaches, staff and studentathletes, for many years to come. We are excited to return to Rocky Top." The reaction was mixed. A majority of Tennessee fans seemed perplexed by the decision while the majority of national media members thought it was a great hire. Most wondered why Turnkey Sports & Entertainment was paid $75,000 (plus expenses) to find a guy that probably still has a working keycard on the UT campus.

The reality is this. No hire short of Blackburn was going to bring the Tennessee fan base together. The fact that Blackburn was never given a formal interview is extremely concerning, and brings back echoes of Kippy Brown's sham interview at the same time Derek Dooley was dotting the i's on his contract in 2010. Also, the optics of hiring an important member of former Tennessee athletic director Mike Hamilton's staff isn't great. That group fired Fulmer, hired Lane Kiffin and Dooley, as well as baseball coach Todd Raleigh.

Even the hiring of Bruce Pearl... tremendous for five years before blowing up in year six, opens up questions about Currie's ability to make productive changes.

That all said... Currie is a good choice here for a few reasons. He spent eight years in charge at a Power 5 conference. He is a solid fundraiser. He is a Tennessee guy that knows what the fan base and donors desire, things Hart never quite grasped. He is a stickler in terms of NCAA rules, which is not a bad thing for an athletic department that has had its share of run-ins with the governing body in the past decade.

In addition, Tennessee didn't hire Cincinnati AD Mike Bohn. Going back to the Cincinnati well yet again (Davenport and football coach Butch Jones came there UC) would be been a public relations calamity.

Whether or not Currie is successful at Tennessee remains to be seen. If nothing else, his hiring (first day at work for Currie is April 1) finally closes the Dave Hart chapter, and brings stability to an athletics department that has been sorely lacking leadership.

Hardin Valley has high hopes in softball

By Ken Lay

Over the past two seasons Hardin Valley Academy has emerged as a key player on the high school softball scene.

In 2016, the Lady Hawks won both the District 4-AAA and Region 2-AAA Tournament Championships after winning both titles and reaching the Class AAA State Tournament in Hardin Valley, which went 27-14 last season, had its campaign come to a close with a loss to Seymour at home in the state sectional round. The Lady Hawks are again looking for big things this year but ninth-year head coach Whitney Hickam-Cruze knows that things won't be easy for her squad. "Offensively, we'll have some big shoes to fill," she said.

HVA must replace leadoff hitter Haley Cloud, Leslie Beecham and pitcher Kaleigh Wynne, a force in both the pitcher's circle and at the plate for the last three years. Wynne did everything for her team. She's now at the College of Central Florida and left a legacy as one of the KIL's top pitchers and most feared power threats with the bat.

"It can be argued that we've ridden the coat tails of Kaleigh Wynne for the last three years," Hickam-Cruze said. "She was our workhorse on the mound and she was one of our best hitters.

"I'm going to be interested to see how these girls respond."

While Wynne's departure leaves a void, Hardin Valley has a pair of young pitchers who picked up some valuable experience while the ace was injured and couldn't pitch.

Junior Mikaela Chavis and returning sophomore Emalee McCord threw some clutch innings and won some crucial games for the Lady Hawks last season and Hickam-Cruze said that she's confident in both pitchers. "We feel like we're in a good position as far as our pitching staff goes," Hickam-Cruze said. "These pitchers got some experience while Kaleigh was hurt last year."

Hardin Valley has a unique mix of youth and experience and while the Lady Hawks return just one senior in third baseman Aubry McGuire, they have many battle-tested veterans and the coach said she hopes that will serve her squad well in 2017, which will begin at Maryville on March 13 in a rematch of the 2016 district championship

"I think one of our biggest strengths is our experience winning," Hickam-Cruze said. "These girls won as freshmen and they won as sophomores." Hickam-Cruze said that her team has one glaring weakness and that hurt HVA in a sectional lost to Seymour.

feel like we need to work on is discipline at the plate," she said. "That really hurt us in the substate game last year. "We have to have quality at-bats and we have to have more plate discipline. The team

"The one thing that I really that hits the ball best will be the team that wins the district." In recent years, pitching has been the determining factor in who emerges as the district champion. But many of the league's top pitchers have graduated and moved on to Top returners for the Lady Hawks include: Dukes; Chavis (who will play in the outfield and will likely be a power threat at the plate this season); McGuire; McCord (who will pitch and play first base in 2017) and Jasmine Goodman (a sophomore utility player, who picked up a big hit in the district championship game last season).

The Doctor is in a weekly column by Dr. Jim Ferguson

Dreams, War & La La Land

My wife Becky remembers her dreams; mostly don't. Perhaps it's because dreams are so often random if not totally wako. Some years ago I wrote an essay about dreams concluding that no one knows why these nocturnal visions are necessary for our health. Sleep deprivation - and consequently dream deprivation - is used to coerce terrorists to divulge their

Perhaps dreaming is a way for the brain to sort out and then file events of the day. Possibly the brain rebalances or remodels itself during dreaming which occurs every ninety minutes during REM (rapid eye movement) sleep. Occasionally, I try to recall my dreams, though admittedly I haven't been very successful, perhaps because dreams seem so illogical to me and more often seem like some surrealistic Salvador Dali painting. The ancients believed enlightenment came in dreams. Recently, I awakened from a dream where I was writing about happier topics. But that was before the war.

Democrats now dream of destroying the Trump Presidency. You should realize that the leadership of the Democrat Party are actually liberal-progressives and only masquerade as Democrats like FDR. I know many fine people who are more liberal than me and may vote Democrat as I once did. However, the leadership of the Democrat Party is as alien to me as some extraterrestrial. They live in La La Land like the Holly-weird's who botched their own academy awards while telling us they know what's best. All the while, the utterly odious filmmaker, Michael Moore, malignes Carryn Owens, the wife of fallen US Navy SEAL, Ryan Owens.

The latest Democrat attack is on Jeff Sessions and again revolves around the Russians whom they see under every rock. In December 2016, Barack Obama said his administration's investigation showed "no vote tampering" in the November 2016 election and the purported Russian operative attacks on Republican and Democrat websites were "no different than activities going back to Soviet days."

I frequently dream of a united America, but realize that the level of divide is comparable to that of the American Civil War and will not end until one side wins. Just as the southern states who seceded eventually returned to the Union, it took total war and their defeat to bring them back. Mercy can be extended only after the vanguished recognize and acknowledge defeat.

The Democrat party operates from the perspective of total war. And even in their defeat they continue the struggle, seeing their defeat as engineered by foreigners rather than poor candidates and failed policies. Rodney King once lamented, "Can't we all just get along?" Perhaps Republicans feel similarly, but if so they ignore history. In war, there must be an acknowledged winner or we end up with a nuclear North Korea and the standoff at the DMZ. The Japanese and the Germans are now our allies, but only after their total defeat.

Some historians are critical of Civil War General William Tecumseh Sherman. With the approval of President Lincoln and General Ulysses S Grant, Sherman unleashed total war across the south to destroy the infrastructure which was enabling the Confederate armies to continue fighting. Sherman is quoted as saying, "War is cruelty. There is no use trying to reform it. The crueler it is, the sooner it will be over." Total war has been used in other many conflicts down through the ages, notably the Hebrew conquest of Canaan as chronicled in the Bible, the Peloponnesian War and World War II. These days Americans are not shooting bullets at each other, but all out war in the political polis (citystate) is none the less operative. War has always been cruel, even if fought with words. Our war with each other is now straining friendships. Man has even conjured up the notion of a "just war" to define the morality of going to war and its conduct. Christian notables such as Augustine (5th century) argued that war can be fought to protect peace and punish wickedness. Thomas Aquinas (13th century) held that war must be waged by proper governmental authority, for good reason and with peace as a motive. Finally, the philosophical School of Salamanca (16th century) held that war must be a last resort, and when necessary to prevent a greater evil.

These days, I often desire an escape and daydream of other places - in addition to other times in history. My wife, Becky, finds it odd that I dream of visiting other worlds like those recently discovered circling Trappist-1, a star forty light years from Earth. In recent years, scientists have found more than 3,400 exoplanets circling distant stars. It appears that the universe is full of planets circling trillions of stars. Even our closest neighbor, Alpha Centauri, has a planet circling its companion star B Centauri. What is exciting is that the planets of Trappist-1 are rocky and earthlike in size, rather than large gas planets such as Jupiter. And three of the seven planets in the Trappist system are in the "Goldilock" or habitable zone, where proximity to their sun might allow water and enable life as we know it. However, I'll only be able to dream about alien vistas because traveling on the fastest space ship humans currently possess would take 70,000 years to travel just four light years to Alpha Centauri.

Emily Dickinson is my favorite poet. She never traveled far from her home in Amherst, Massachusetts. However, she dreamed large. Her poems imagined life, love, immortality and "distant shores." I'll leave you with two of my favorites for reflection and your own dreams.

During the live auction, participants will have the opportunity to bid on having School of Music students perform at an event in their home or another location. Other live auction items include a week for two at an all-inclusive Bahia Principe Caribbean resort with a $1,500

With the theme "A Night travel budget, a evening of dining at Blackberry Farm will feature music, a wine for four, a week at Bel Nor pull, fine dining, silent Cottage on Anna Maria and live auctions, and live Island, and a Caribbean dinner for eight at Belvedere, home of Karen and Harvey White, featuring UT's Andy Bliss and Cafe Marimba.

> All contributions from the gala will fund scholarships to help recruit young musicians to the School of Music, thanks to the sponsorship of Pilot Flying J.

"The gala is a great opportunity to bring together the musical talents of the School of Music students and faculty and the generous supporters of the School of Music," said Karen White, this year's gala chair on the School of Music's Board of Advisors. "We are planning a delightful evening to raise money for scholarships so that the UT School of Music can continue to attract talented students."

The Chaplain Corps

All through my life I heard the expression, "you're never too old to learn." And that's so very true. I am so pleased to be able to learn something new on many occasions, something that I never heard of before or knew about. I learned this interesting piece of news from my friend at church, Mrs. Diane Elizabeth Crabb. The city of Knoxville has a Chaplain Corps which Diane belongs to. Here are some interesting facts concerning the Corps.

The KPD Chaplain Corps is a support service for KPD employees and their families as well as the community in crisis situations. It is on-call to the Department 24 hours a day and seven days a week for: spiritual support and assistance to KPD officers or personnel and their families for personal needs such as marriage, family, illness, stress or grief. (I am quoting here). And it is also for spiritual support and assistance to the community in crisis in response to death, accident, or other police calls in which a chaplain can the KPD Chaplaincy program during the parish nurse training when a speaker from KPD spoke to them and their program was also just beginning.

After retiring from Cherokee Psychiatric Health Systems as a registered nurse, she thought she would like to follow up with this volunteer work. She attends funerals, hospital visits, death notices, and other areas of KPD. They are not there to "preach" or "correct" their thinking, primarily there to listen.

UT Professor: How to Help a Picky Eater

Many parents caregivers are distressed by what their children eat-or don't eat. However, most kids get plenty of variety and nutrition in their diets over the course of a week, according to Lee Murphy, a nutrition professor at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. Until a child's food preferences mature, Murphy suggested these tips to prevent mealtime battles one bite at a time:

Respect the child's hunger-or lack thereof. Young children tend to eat only when they're hungry. If a child isn't hungry, don't force a meal or Stay calm. If the child senses that you're unhappy with his or her eating habits, it may become a battle of wills. Threats and punishments only reinforce the power struggle.

Keep an eye on the clock. Nix juice and snacks for at least one hour before meals. If a child comes to the table hungry, he or she may be more motivated to eat.

Don't expect too much. After age two, slower growth often reduces a child's appetite. A few bites may be all it takes for the child to feel full.

Limit liquid calories. Lowfat or fat-free dairy products and 100 percent fruit juice can be important parts of a healthy diet, but if a child fills up on milk or juice, he or she may have no room for meals

Start small. Offer several foods in small portions. Let the child choose what he or she eats.

Boycott the clean plate club. Don't force a child to clean his or her plate. This may only ignite-or reinforce-a power struggle over food. Instead, allow the child to stop eating when he or she is full. Be patient with new foods.

Young children often touch or smell new foods, and may even put tiny bites in their mouths and then take them back out again. A child may need repeated exposure to a new food before he or she takes the first bite. Set a good example. If you consume a variety of healthy foods and beverages, the child is more likely to follow Know when to seek help. If a child is energetic and growing, he or she is probably doing fine. Consult the child's doctor if you're concerned that picky eating is compromising his or her growth and development or if certain foods seem to make the child ill. If limited food consumption is long term, supplements may need to be considered as well.

"A child's eating habits won't likely change overnight," says Murphy. "But small steps each day can help promote a lifetime of healthy eating."

Tennessee State Park to Host Statewide Hikes to Celebrate Spring the Mississippi River in West Conservation Brock Hill. "We

Tennessee's 56 State Parks are hosting free guided hikes statewide on Saturday, March 18 to celebrate the coming of spring and the bounty of recreation opportunities state parks offer. Park staff - who can speak to the natural, cultural and historical treasures that all Tennessee State Parks have to offer - will guide free hikes throughout the day. From the cypress swamps of Tennessee to the rugged ridge tops and waterfalls in the middle of the state to the majestic mountains in the East, every park showcases a unique piece of Tennessee's outdoor beauty.

"For 80 years our state park system has created outdoor adventures and recreational opportunities for all Tennesseans," said Deputy Commissioner of Parks and are always excited to highlight our state's beauty and special stories."

The wide selection of events across the state ensures that everyone can find a hike suitable for them. Hikes will range in distance, degree of skill, accessibility, and time of day in an effort to accommodate the needs of anyone who seeks to enjoy a day outdoors. Planned activities along the trails include wildlife viewing, spring clean-ups, scavenger hunts, historical interpretive programs and more.

For a full list of all planned hikes for March 18, visit http://tnstateparks.com/ about/special-events/springhike/#/?holiday=spring-hike. You can share your photos with Tennessee State Parks on social media using the hashtag #spinghikeTN.

St. John's Lutheran Offers 'Mountain Vespers' on Wednesdays During Lent

In a world full of noise and chaos, St. John's Lutheran Church will offer healing balm in the form of quiet worship and reflection called "Mountain Vespers," Wednesday evening worship by candlelight during the Lenten season.

"Somewhere between the high lonesome of bluegrass and whisper-like vocals in the style of Sufjan Stevens, and close harmony of 'Mountain Vespers' open a space for memory, reflection, and prayer," says Rev. John Tirro. "As sun sets and darkness falls, we light the evening candle, together singing and prayer will lead with Christians across centuries, and we look to God's light, Jesus Christ, to see us through."

"Mountain Vespers" begins at 6:30 p.m. on rious meeting of our need Wednesday nights between in Christ. Gospel verses March 8 and April 5. St.

is located at 544 N. Broadway in the heart of Knoxville's mission district. A
