Why are sidewalks so important to neighborhoods?

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Metropolitan Planning Commission is urging both the city of Knoxville and Knox County to require sidewalks in any new subdivision development. Some developers are including sidewalks in the plans they present. The emphasis on "Walkability" in the city is growing and Mayor Madeline Rogero included nearly $3 million in her budget in addition to the funds left over from last year for other sidewalks. Monday Mayor Rogero cut the ribbon on the extension of the $382,000 sidewalk along Young High Pike connecting that neighborhood with Chapman Highway. She announced five other major sidewalk projects that should begin within the month. The projects planned for this fiscal year include Gleason Drive between Downtown West Boulevard and Bearden High School; Palmetto Road between Western Avenue and London Drive; Buffat Mill Road between Whittle Springs and Bridalwood Drive; Atlantic Avenue between Pershing Street and North Broadway and Wilson Avenue between South Chestnut Street and South Harrison Street.

School Board delays action on revising discipline policy

By Pete Gawda

After months of discussion on the topic of revising the board policy on misbehavior and disciplinary actions, the Knox County Board of Education, at their Monday evening work session, decided to delay any action at this time. As a result of lengthy discussion, the board recognized that it would not be possible for the proposed policy change to go into effect before school starts on August 7. Therefore they decided to delay its implementation until the beginning of the following school year. That would give school officials ample time to consider proposed revisions and present them to the board for approval well in advance of the beginning of the next school year.

Mayor Madeline Rogero (center) is joined by city staff and South Knoxville residents in cutting the ribbon officially opening the extension of the Young High Pike sidewalk, connecting the neighborhood to Chapman Highway.

Other projects, such as the confirmed for The Focus that Cedar Lane sidewalk that will connect Pratt Road to Sterchi Road along the south side of the busy connector street, are planned. Authorized in 2014, the project should be accepting bids this summer for the 2,100 foot length. It replaces a foot path that local neighbors use to reach the businesses along Cedar Lane and Merchants Drive.

Director of the Metropolitan Planning Commission, the MPC "may recommend and the commission may require" sidewalks in some new subdivisions in Knox County. Green said the recommendation is based on where the subdivision is being planned, and take into account whether or not it is in an area of "parental responsibility" and pedestrian needs.

Rogero called the Young Gerald Green, Executive High Pike sidewalk extension an "important link" for the community and said sidewalks

"enhance livability."

"People can leave the car at home and shop and sidewalks improve retail in the sale of homes," she said.

Jim Hagerman, Director of Engineering, spoke briefly about some of the difficulties in building the sidewalk, such as having to build a new drainage system there and the challenges of the slopes in the neighborhood.

Dawn Distler, director of

At previous meetings, when considering this policy change, the board had looked at defining different levels of misbehavior and disciplinary procedures and disciplinary options for each level of misbehavior.

A faith based community organization, JusticeKnox, has expressed much interest in this issue. During the public comment time, Ron Webster, a spokesman for that group said his organization had no comment at that time but would issue a written comment.

Mike McMillan commented on the policy change he promoted on Code of Behavior and Discipline which has wording forbidding any type of discrimination based on "race, creed, color, national origin, religion or sex." If a school system employee is found guilty of such action, the proposed

What Does the Law Say About Having Car Insurance?

Why exactly do we have to have car insurance? Is it really against the law to drive around without having it?

Tennessee Code Annotated By Jedidiah McKeehan (T.C.A.) Title 55, attorneyknoxville@ Chapter 12 is gmail.cóm titled, "Financial

T.C.A. 55-12-102 states that "proof of financial responsibility" means: a policy with a limit of not less than $25,000.00 for bodily injury to or death of 1 person, not less than $50,000.00 for bodily injury to or death of 2 or more persons in any 1 accident, and not less than $10,000.00 for damage to property in any 1 accident.

So, if someone has minimum auto insurance coverage in Tennessee, they will have a policy that meets the above numbers. If someone with a state minimum policy crashes in to you, their insurance will only pay you $25,000.00, and then you're

Matlock announces organization of campaign for Congress

From State Representative Jimmy Matlock

On Monday my dear friend Congressman Jimmy Duncan announced that he will not seek reelection to Congress. It has been an honor to watch him serve and lead our community over the years. Since his announcement I've been overwhelmed and humbled by the flood of contacts I've received from people encouraging me to fill the void that will be left by his departure. In light of this encouragement and after much prayer, today I am announcing the organization of a campaign for Tennessee's Second Congressional District.

We live in serious times that require serious leadership. Health care is in critical condition, we're in dire need of immigration reform, and our fiscal house is a disaster, leaving our children and grandchildren buried under a mountain of debt. While these challenges are daunting, they can be overcome through solid, consistent, and serious conservative leadership.

As a small businessman, I've experienced the catastrophic failure of Obamacare on many it repealed and, once it's gone, I promise to do everything in my 33 years of marriage, 35 years spent earning the trust of thousands of customers, and 11 years spent serving the people of the 21st District in the Tennessee House of Representatives have taught me the value of consistently applying conservative principles in every area of life.

Anyone can talk like a conservative. What we need is someone who's going to act like one. We don't need more empty rhetoric. DC is filled with enough hot air already. Nor do we need politicians who have little or no experience building anything of substance in the real world. DC is already loaded with those, too. What we need now is solid, serious conservative leadership and character that's been shaped and tested through real world experience.

When a presumed candidate publicly speculates about "which office to run for next", they model an attitude that most hard working Tennesseans find repugnant. We don't need another politician looking for the next place to land in a career loaded with political experience but lacking any private sector accomplishment. We don't need another smooth political entertainer. We need a tried, tested, and true business leader with real world accomplishments.

Having built a business over 35 years of long days filled with hard work that began well before sunrise, I understand what it means to pour blood, sweat, and tears into a mission that lives or dies by how well it serves others. Having had to dive into that work at an early age in order to provide for my family, I understand what it means to sacrifice ease, comfort, and shortterm goals for the benefit, security, and prosperity of others. Having been blessed by God with a wife of 33 years and three children to raise through often lean, hard times, I appreciate the necessity of healthy families to our culture.

I enter this race inspired by a passion to help secure a better, brighter future for the people, families, and businesses of East Tennessee.

I look forward to the campaign ahead and the opportunity to fight for a vision that celebrates the values of the hard working people who make East Tennessee great.

Publisher's Position McMillan Zero Tolerance For Discrimination

By Steve Hunley, Publisher publisher@knoxfocus.com

The Knox County Board of Education has been supposedly wrestling with a new policy for disciplining students. The Board has been urged to adopt "restorative policies", which focus less on punishment than welcoming those students who commit offenses once deemed appropriate for suspension with open arms and attempting to reason with them. Some of the people pushing these policies really wish to see most everything decriminalized and claim students of color are victims of inherent bias by the school system. The notion of whether the student in question has actually committed an offense is immaterial.

Board member Mike McMillan actually went to work and drafted an inside the system - - - teacher's aide, teacher, administrator or even the superintendent - - - found to have discriminated against any student on the basis of race, gender, religion or sexual preference is to be terminated. McMillan in fact took it even farther, stating any employee of the Knox County school system who has been found guilty of knowingly not reporting any instance of discrimination faces termination. That applies from the lowliest employee all the way to the superintendent of schools. The McMillan amendment makes it virtually impossible for anyone to cover up any instance of discrimination in our schools and affords protection to students.

deserves praise from those who worry about actual discrimination in our schools. It will prove to be an effective tool in combating discrimination in the Knox County school system. Still, the rush to adopt restorative practices is less about discrimination than the concept of superior rights. Nor has it had the intended effect in school systems around the coun-with the problem. McMillan of the Syracuse Teachers' 65% of teachers surveyed proposed that any person Association, recently wrote a letter saying the end result of the restorative practices approach to discipline has created a "systematic inability to administer and enforce consistent consequences for violent and highly disruptive student behaviors" which "put students and staff at risk and make quality instruction impossible." Apparently in some school systems even threats against teachers are ignored. One teacher in Los Angeles stated, "I was terrified and bullied by a fourth-grade student." She claimed the student told her to "'Back off b - -- h'. I told him to go to the office and he said 'No, b - - h, and no one can make me go." Another Los Angeles teacher sighed, "We now have a 'restorative justice' McMillan's achievement counselor, but we still have the same problems. Kids aren't even suspended for fights or drugs." The problems have spread in Orange County, California and are even worse in the Santa Ana public schools where authorities claim middle school students routinely smoke pot in bathrooms. According to the Orange County Register teachers have been spit upon, pelted with eggs, and even threatamendment that truly dealt try. Kevin Ahern, President ened with being stabbed.

in the Santa Ana school district say the softening of discipline in schools is not working.

The Los Angeles Times received numerous letters to the editor questioning the implementation of restorative practices. One citizen wrote, "the article on the Los Angeles Unified School District's new discipline policy, which focuses more on 'restorative justice' and less on punishment, goes to the core of why public education has so deteriorated." The writer plaintively posed a very interesting question: "If a teacher cannot maintain discipline in the classroom, and if disruptive misbehavior cannot be prevented, then how can any student expect to learn?"

In Philadelphia, the talking circles encouraged by the restorative practices approach, doesn't seem to be working. One former teacher complained students misbehave and then dare teachers and administrators to remove them from classrooms, knowing nothing will happen to them. Evidently one student boasted to teacher Allen Zollman, "I'm going to torture you. I'm doing this because I can't be removed." Zollman readily acknowledged the problem, saying, "The lavishing attention on stuless we are willing or able to respond, the more they will control the classroom, the hallways and the school" in comments made before the U. S. Commission on Civil Rights. Another teacher in Oakland, California reported to the Christian Science Monitor that a student who set another student's hair on fire went to a comforting restorative talk rather than facing a suspension. Yet there are folks in the movement to implement restorative justice who hail the system in Oakland as a model for the program. A teacher in Portland was punched in the face by a student, requiring a visit to the emergency room, but was advised by a superior not to press charges, noting how difficult it would be for the student to overcome a criminal record. The teacher, a woman, was told that being white and the student a minority, she might have played a role in her own assault for holding unconscious racial biases. Clearly, it's not justice for all.

The message is not hard to discern. Teacher Paul Bruno, who spent time in the talking circles required by restorative justice practices, noted it "can encourage misbehavior by dents for committing infractions." Bruno concluded, "the circles may unwittingly allow already assertive students to leverage their social dominance even further inside the classroom."

And don't assume every violent act in a public school is reported. An audit conducted by the State Comptroller's office in New York found fully one third of all violent acts in 10 New York City schools went unreported. The Comptroller's report found that over 400 incidents that should have been reported went undisclosed. School systems have little incentive to accurately report such things, as underreporting gives the appearance of safety.

The end result in many localities has been a growing number of private and charter schools, a decision made by parents who were horrified by schools becoming less safe for their children and the learning environment deteriorating rapidly. The same thing will likely happen in Knox County, yet it was Mike McMillan who actually expanded the coverage to protect many more students from real discrimination.

The August meeting of the Knox County Board of Education was short and harmonious. It lasted about 30 minutes with very little discussion and only one vote that was not unanimous.

The board voted to postpone the first reading of a proposed board policy that had been much discussed in the past, Misbehavior and Disciplinary Options. This proposed policy is to be sent back to the superintendent who will solicit comments from students, staff and the community. # Old Knoxville High School will be 80 senior apartments

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Walking through the hallways of the old Knoxville High School brings back memories for any older person who went to high school anywhere. The large facility at 101 East Fifth Avenue has four buildings and is being converted for senior living.

Recently Knox Heritage invited the public to see the progress of the ongoing renovation there and many of the former classrooms were open for visiting to see the changes. Several have been reworked and the historic school building will soon house 80 senior citizens in what the developer says will be a "fun place to live."

Developer Rick Dover told the crowd during the tour that the project may be completed and opened in November. He said the old school is, "The least ambitious of all the projects we've done because the building is in such a good shape."

Dover spoke briefly as did Knox Heritage's Kim Trent and Kevin Murphey. Trent recognized the many members and board of Knox Heritage and noted the organization's work with Dover on several other restoration projects.

"We really need some more 'gray' here," she said of downtown and the growing number of younger people moving to the revitalized city. Old Knox High School sits just one block north of the Old City on North Broadway and East Fifth.

Three floors of the main building are being renovated. Some of the former classrooms show indications of where the blackboards were and a large safe from the original school now graces one of the first rooms on the main floor. Visitors could see how the historic windows are being replaced or recovered, how the original woodwork has been revealed from under 8 to 10 coats of paint, and note several plaques that will remain honoring former students, principals, and city officials who authorized the 1910 construction.

Old Knoxville High School is soon to be Senior Apartments and recently people of all ages toured the facility in an event sponsored by Knox Heritage.

Dover said the residents will have apartments equipped with a full kitchen and laundry. What do a Pulitzer Prize winning writer, a movie director, a noted actor, and a former mayor of Knoxville have in common?

All of them attended Knoxville High School.

The list is impressive for a schoolthatopenedin 1910 and closed in 1951. The majestic old building, being repurposed as for senior living, is noted for 13 state championships and two National Football Championships in the 1930s.

More than anything the high school, which had more than 2,500 students annually in its heyday, produced the likes of book and screen writer James Agee. Clarence Brown, the movie director, was also a student there as were actor and singer John Cullum, award-winning actress Patricia Neal, and former Mayor Kyle Testerman.

Other notables also attended Knoxville High School including UT Coach Tommy Bartlett; former UT President Edward Boling; Harvey Broome, a lawyer instrumental in the formation of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park; and John Ward, the "Voice of the Vols" from 1965 until 1999.

Mary Costa, the famous opera singer and actress, was also a student. Actor Jerome Courtland, former chairman of the TVA Board Charles Dean, Airforce General Norman Gaddis, real estate developer Guilford Glazer, and novelist David Madden.

Other Knoxville High School alumni include Admiral Maurice Weisner, scientist Robert Rochelle and actress Sara O'Meara.

Old Knoxville High School was a "city" school that went to county ownership when Knoxville joined the Knox County School System. The county transferred "Each apartment is a little different," he said because each classroom was different from the others.

Dover said he didn't know what the lease cost for apartments would be but pledged it would be "very reasonable, below market value."

Ridley Mitchell, the colorful congressman from Tennessee's Fourth District, suddenly found himself embroiled in a debate with fellow Representative John J. Cochran of Missouri, an effective and acerbic speaker. The topic was the seemingly unimportant removal of Bedford County in Mitchell's Congressional district to the jurisdiction of the federal court in Winchester, Tennessee, which was in turn, attached to the federal court in Nashville. Cochran recalled Mitchell had claimed in a remark made to a House committee farmers in Bedford County were lucky to get 5 cents for eggs; Cochran snarled he did not believe farmers should bear the burden of having to travel sixty miles to appear in court. Veteran newspaperman John D. Erwin, a special correspondent for a number of Tennessee newspapers, including the Nashville Tennessean, covered the altercation between the two congressmen. Erwin wrote, "Judge Mitchell's speech was one of the wittiest and most entertaining of this session and kept the House in an uproar." When fellow Democrat Harry P. Beam of Illinois wondered just what contribution Tennessee had made to the country, Ridley Mitchell replied, "If the gentleman is not familiar with the contribution, which Tennessee has made to this country, it would be a very serious reflection upon caused House members to erupt in laughter and left Congressman Beam red-faced. Mitchell went down a list of prominent Tennesseans, including Presidents Andrew Jackson, James K. Polk and Andrew Johnson. Mitchell rattled off famous frontiersmen and soldiers Nathan Bedford Forrest, John Sevier, Davy Crockett and Alvin York. "I want to make the observation that in this same environment was produced the greatest secretary of state that any administration ever had for it is there Cordell Hull has his residence," Mitchell thundered. Ridley Mitchell then told his colleagues his district "produces cotton, corn, livestock, all the mineral resources" and more importantly, "above all, Tennesseans continue to produce fathers and mothers to go west and settle that country." That brought Congressman Thomas F. Ford to his feet and asked if Mitchell could name any Tennesseans who had "contributed to the wealth and greatness of the state of California." Ridley Mitchell barely paused before saying, "If I had the capacity of an adding machine and knew all the statistics contained in Mulhall's reports, I would not be enabled to answer the inquiry. Men like McAdoo (William G.

McAdoo, former Secretary of the Treasury during the administration of President Woodrow Wilson, presidential aspirant, and then U. S. senator from California) and others came from Tennessee and went to California."

"Tennessee is the center of the world, my friends," Ridley Mitchell said. "She has contributed not only of material wealth, but of that which is immensely more valuable. The service rendered by her patriotic sons of the battle fields and in the halls of Congress throughout the years."

Naturally, the people of Tennessee enjoyed not only Ridley Mitchell's wit, but his advocacy of his district and the Volunteer State. Mitchell hurried home to Tennessee in the summer of 1933, bringing along his Chief of Staff Todd Elrod and maintaining offices in Cookeville and Murfreesboro. That summer Congressman Mitchell, along with Senator K. D. McKellar and Congressmen Carroll Reece and Jere Cooper, headed to Paris, Tennessee where the American Legion planned a celebration honoring Congressman Gordon Browning. Mitchell hurried to Nashville to speak to 500 "letter carriers" employed by the U.S. Post Office at the Maxwell House Hotel. Congressman Mitchell told the postal employees he believed the government could raise taxes from "international bankers who Buckle, and Cortner commuthe gentleman who makes had money and had not paid nities on "an inspection trip Senate, the Congressman is satisfactory tonight." The he died of a heart attack on the inquiry." Mitchell's retort federal income tax" rather to Cascade Springs." Each flirted with the idea of run- congressman's doctors than reducing the salaries of "letter carriers and exservice men." Mitchell was also the featured speaker when the newly formed Lions Club of Lebanon, Tennessee celebrated its charter. Moving throughout his district, congressman Ridley Mitchell regaled the Rutherford County chapter of the Disabled American Veterans' club with his soaring oratory in July of 1933. Mitchell, with an almost infallible sense of good politics, stopped in tiny Woodbury, Tennessee to "mingle with the large first Monday crowd" on his way to Murfreesboro to speak to an American Legion meeting. Mitchell was one of the principal speakers, including former governor A. H. Roberts, in Livingston, Tennessee at the "Century of Progress" homecoming celebration. "The best Anglo-Saxon blood in the country flows in the veins of the people of this town," Ridley Mitchell told his delighted audience, "whose sons have gone so far, but who remain so true to the traditions of their youth." Congressman Mitchell left Livingston for Murfreesboro to speak before the Rotary Club. Mitchell claimed Tennessee "had been the most favored state in the Union" under the Roosevelt administration, telling his audience approximately "that $34,000,000 is to be spent within a three hours' ride of Murfreesboro." While Mitchell urged Rotarians to support President Roosevelt and the New Deal, he did not mention virtually all of the federal largesse coming to Tennessee was the handiwork of Senator K. D. McKellar, who was the ranking member of the Senate's powerful Appropriations Committee. The wily and relentless McKellar's ability to produce appropriations for Tennessee was the subject of awe and some little resentment on the part of his colleagues inside the Senate.

Ridley Mitchell walked through the grounds of the Clay County fair, shaking hands, slapping backs and conversing with friends in late August of 1933. Congressman Mitchell traveled to Wartrace, Tennessee along with residents of the Normandy, Cortner, Bell of the communities were interested in harnessing the water from the springs to pipe into the towns. Mitchell had spoken in Bell Buckle on the project earlier in that afternoon. Ridley Mitchell was the principal speaker in Lynchburg, Tennessee when the Moore County elementary and high schools were opened on August 29, 1933. Never one to miss a county fair, Congressman J. Ridley Mitchell was again walking through the throngs of people at the DeKalb County fair in Alexandria, Tennessee on the last day of August. As Ridley Mitchell campaigned nonstop inside the Fourth Congressional district, friends of Ewin L. Davis were not entirely happy with the congressman. Out of elective politics himself, Ewin L. Davis worked at his job on the Federal Trade Commission and was elevated to the chairmanship at the end of December 1934. Davis had other things on his mind besides politics in the spring of 1935 as his mother lay dying. Christina Davis was the mother of six children; five sons and one daughter. She had seen her children do quite well in both the worlds of business and politics. Former President Woodrow Wilson and his wife, Edith, had visited Mrs. Davis after they had left the White House. The former President called on very few people and Mrs. Wilson invited Christina Davis to repay the call at their home in Washington, D. C. Mrs. Warren Harding had also invited Christina Davis to the White House while Mrs. Davis had been in the Capitol to visit her son. As she lay dying in the home of her only daughter, her sons hurried to her bedside. All of her children, save for ambassador-at-large Norman Davis were with her when she slipped away. Ridley Mitchell faced a

ill and partially paralyzed

spirited challenge from state senator John J. Jewell, who had resigned his post as attorney for the federal Home Owners' Loan Corporation, a position he had secured through Senator K. D. McKellar. Mitchell's political aspirations clearly went well beyond the House of Representatives and when Cordell Hull resigned his seat in the United States congressman's condition ning in the 1934 special election while Congressman Gordon Browning intended to challenge the powerful McKellar. Ridley Mitchell eventually thought better of the notion and his opponent, John J. Jewell, drew support from many friends of Senator McKellar and former Congressman Ewin L. Davis. Mitchell underestimated Jewell's candidacy and initially, the congressman didn't believe a speaking campaign inside his Fourth District was necessary. Ridley Mitchell soon discovered Jewell was gaining strength rapidly and began to campaign hard. Mitchell's own supporters had plotted to support Senator Nathan L. Bachman, who had been appointed to succeed Cordell Hull, against Gordon Browning to promote the Fourth District congressman's own prospective bid for the Senate in 1936. While Mitchell defeated John J. Jewell, the margin was narrower than the congressman might have wished. Jewell carried only four of the eighteen counties inside the Fourth District, but he nipped at Ridley Mitchell's heels in several other counties. Jewell won 20,157 votes to 26,209 votes for Congressman Mitchell. Mitchell campaigned hard for the Democratic ticket throughout his district intended to be a statewide candidate in the future. Congressman Mitchell, along with a female companion, was injured when he was returning from Knoxville, having attended the Kentucky - Tennessee football game. Mitchell's car collided with a truck in Crossville and his injuries were serious enough to send him to a Nashville hospital. The Mitchell's brother, Dr. E. W. Mitchell, said the congressman "suffered a bursted knee cap on the left leg, his left arm was broken" and was "bruised about the chest and cut about the face." Ridley Mitchell underwent surgery to repair his kneecap at St. Thomas Hospital in Nashville and Dr. E. W. Mitchell said "the outlook for his early recovery is fairly hopeful." Dr. Mitchell worried about the "danger of pneumonia or infection setting in from the operation", but declared "the were satisfied enough with his condition to announce Ridley Mitchell would be able to "eat Christmas dinner at his Crossville home" as well as to "answer the roll call when Congress meets in January." That proved to be an overly optimistic opinion, as Mitchell was not released from the hospital until December 30, 1934. Leaving the hospital on crutches, Mitchell said, "I'll be there when they start" when he was asked if he would attend the opening of the new Congress. Ridley Mitchell was well enough to express his delight that former U.S. senator Smith Brookhart, а noisy progressive Republican who had been defeated in 1932, had lost his job with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration where he was employed as a foreign trade advisor. Brookhart had been one of the more egregious members of Congress who had hired a large number of his immediate family. Mitchell had used Brookhart as a prime illustration of the need to pass his anti-nepotism bill. Ridley Mitchell once again turned back a determined challenge from John J. Jewell in the 1936 Democratic primary. Mitchell saw his best chance to go to the U.S. Senate in a 1938 special election for the remaining and beyond, a clear sign he

Governor Gordon Browning had appointed George L. Berry to the seat following Bachman's death and Berry very much wanted to remain in the Senate. Senator K. D. McKellar and Memphis Boss E. H. Crump backed the candidacy of Tom Stewart of Winchester. Undeterred, Ridley Mitchell announced his own candidacy and while he campaigned hard, he ran a disappointing third in the Democratic primary. Mitchell's last hurrah was his bid for governor against incumbent Prentice Cooper in 1942. Ridley Mitchell, displaying his usual flair for publicity and intensive personal contact with voters, gave Governor Cooper a thorough scare. Mitchell would return to Washington, eventually serving as a special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States. After retiring, Ridley Mitchell came home to Crossville where February 26, 1962 at age eighty-four. Ewin L. Davis, remained on the Federal Trade Commission until his own death. He served capably and quietly as a member of the FTC, long since removed from the furor of Tennessee politics. Davis had been stricken with a paralytic stroke in July of 1949 and died on October 23, 1949 while in Bethesda Naval Hospital. Both Ridley Mitchell and Ewin L. Davis made their mark on Tennessee, yet they represented two distinctly different paths of public service. The quiet and scholarly Davis was the antithesis of the colorful and publicity-seeking Ridley Mitchell. Still, both were remarkable Tennesseans.

PAGE B4 The Knoxville FOCUS What will they say?

I just arrived in Hendersonville, TN, to return my grandson Madden to his home. He's graced us with his presence for the last three days. During that time, we made whirlwind trips to places where the boy could enjoy himself. Madden is a wonderful boy who was stricken with the same problem that my brother Jim and I experienced. In my mother's words, "[he] talked incessantly."

Madden spent the prior week with his other grandparents. Now that he's home, the opportunity to tell Mom and Dad about us exists. I'm curious about what he will say. I've talked about my mother since she passed, and I sometimes wonder what my own children will say about me when I'm gone.

> One thing for sure is over the years I've uttered plenty of things that have stuck in their minds. When they've misbehaved, the words "Don't make me spank you" has been yelled through the house.

How ridiculous is it to think that my children would purposely do something to bring about swats to their back sides. Sometimes, I threatened to "wear them out." Yeah, right! Spanking Dallas or Lacey always left me upset for a long time. It was more like punishment for me.

I wonder how I'll be remembered as a dad. My intent was to always do the things that would help my children grow up to be good people who knew how to treat others, who obtained a good education, and who built productive lives. Maybe they might comment on my insistence that they played sports on teams and refused to allow them to quit until seasons were over. Of course, during those years, I made plenty of mistakes; perhaps they won't remember too many of them.

How many of the "lectures" that I subjected them to will be remembered? I've delivered hundreds of them over the years. Not using drugs or driving drunk was one such topic. Another was showing respect to their parents, even when they didn't agree with us. I know that the threat to remove slammed doors from bedrooms is burned into their memory banks. Of course, the one I delivered about the demise of the Egyptian civilization due, in part, to excessive concern with looks and selfadornment will remain long after I've gone to my reward, whatever that might be. What others might be recalled is anybody's guess.

What I hope most of all is that my "young'uns" will recall just how much I loved them. They have been the center of my world, along with Amy. Over the years, they've given me so many times to be proud of them, and the hugs and kisses that they gave as little ones and, though less often, as adults, have made my life a good one. I've watched them learn to love others and allow them to become parts of their lives, and with luck, they will always find the same kind of love that I've experienced with Amy. Lord knows she's put up with my goofy, too often hateful ways for more than 40 years.

August 7, 2017

I certainly hope that Madden will have kind things to say about me. He said today that I was like his mom, who also sometimes becomes miffed with his behaviors. If I'm lucky, he'll remember that I told him I was proud of him. I hope he can say that his grandfather loved him completely and tried to make our time together fun. I further hope he will say that I passed along a couple of good pieces of advice.

I'm not sure the good lord allows us to look down on the ones we leave behind. If that is the case, I only hope that what my family says about me will be mostly good, along with some of my many shortcomings. One things for sure: I won't be remembered as having been saintly.

More than half a million people are expected to visit Tennessee on August 21st to view the upcoming total solar eclipse and some places are already getting crowded. Fort Loudoun Park in Vonore has announced it is already overbooked for the event. The eclipse, depending on where you view it, should start about 2:30 p.m. and last about just over two minutes, bringing darkness along the long route as the shadow of the moon moves from Northwest to Southeast.

OUR VETERANS NEXT DOOR The Dropping of Bombs on Japan

By Randall Baxter

About those two bombs we dropped on Japan:

All my life I have been aware of the moral, ethical, and military thought process that led our nation to the end of the war with Japan the way it was done. I recently visited Pearl Harbor and toured the Arizona Memorial. What a dastardly attack, and who will ever know if our leaders really wanted it to happen. their Asia brothers, and their horrible treatment of American prisoners of war, created a need for the American public to dehumanize this enemy from so far away. Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, and Elmer Fudd were selling war bonds. "Nipping the Nips" and overemphasizing characteristics were the norm. And why not! Hirohito had to be defeated. There had to be pay back.

Using the battles listed above, excluding Okinawa, it was projected that the invasion of Japan would cost 2,000,000 casualties with 500,000 of those KIA. After the ferocity of Okinawa, those numbers doubled.

Japan would be a huge Okinawa if it was attacked by land, sea and air. The buck

No charge, but love offering will be taken.

But, nuclear bombs would actually save lives? Who figured that out?

At first we could only nip away at outlying territories like Guadalcanal, Bougainville and Tarawa.

Our Japanese enemy began to learn more effective, and more atrocious tactics. We began to hate them even more. Saipan, the unneeded battle of Peleliu where parents of friends of mine, two brothers each served one as a Marine and one in the Army. The quartermaster Army soldier buried his Marine brother on that island. The Phillippines, Iwo Jima and finally Okinawa showed increasing determination on the part of the Japanese to defend their homeland. In the USA no one felt sorry for what the Japanese people had allowed to take place. It is what happens when a people loses control of its government.

To invade, or bomb.

Fourteen months of firebombing had The Japanese brutal Blitzkrieg on not helped bring the war to an end. The Japanese were hoping that this stubborn refusal to stop the war would bring the USA and its Allies to the peace table to bargain for an end to the war with favorable options for the Empire. This was unacceptable to most people in The USA. The cost was already too high. There had to be a decisive end,

> The bombs had been tested at the Trinity test site on July 16. The final parts had been delivered to Tinian on the ill-fated USS Indianapolis. The crew on the Enola Gay had been briefed and prepared.

> The targets of Hiroshima and Nagasaki had been selected. The marines and soldiers who had died at Guadalcanal to Okinawa wanted this to end as much as those who survived.

> Instant death to thousands of Japanese families, with over 300,000 dying by 1950 seemed a small number when compared to a possible 1,000,000 more American lives to bring this to an acceptable end.

> Ethics and logic would say it is wrong to drop bombs with such magnitude. The deaths and dying would be cruel, so many children who did not start the war, compared to all America's children who would die conventionally. The math says it was a no brainer. What say you?

Fulmer discusses suicide prevention at KCS in-service session

By Ken Lay

The halls and classrooms were largely empty at Farragut High School last week but teachers and administrators were there. They were preparing to welcome students back today.

But Tuesday afternoon, the teachers addressed a dark issue confronting students in today's world as they discussed the growing problem of teenage suicide, an issue that has reached epidemic proportions according to former Tennessee football coach

Phillip Fulmer.

Weah takes his soccer talents to small Illinois school, has big plans

By Ken Lay

Philip Weah has big future plans in both soccer and life. And on Wednesday, July 26, he took another step towards achieving his lofty goals.

Weah, who recently graduated from Central High School, signed a National Letter of Intent to continue his soccer career at Carl Sandburg University in Carthage, Illinois.

He played two seasons for the Bobcats and helped Central capture its first Region 2-AAA Tournament berth for the first time in recent memory. He was also an all-District 3-AAA and all-regional standout as a defender in 2017.

Weah starred on the soccer field in Fountain City but he's a relative newcomer to soccer. He's only played since he was in the eighth grade.

He's also fairly new to the United States. He came from war-torn Liberia with his mother in 2004. He has aspirations to play professionally but his long-term goals are to accomplish much more.

"I wanted to go far away because I wanted to get a chance to have professional [soccer] tryouts in Atlanta," he said. "I'm going to major in business communications and I want to go back to my home country to build a school.

"I want the people in my country to have an opportunity to get an education. I'm here with my mom and we got separated from my dad during a war."

Weah said that he owes his success to Bobcats coach Chris Quinn, who took over as the school's boys coach in 2017 and immediately injected some passion into the program.

"I really want to thank coach Quinn," Weah said. "I told him that I wanted to be an all-district player. He worked with me and he talked to me.

"He made sure that I was going to be more than that. I was an all-region player too."

Quinn, however, wasn't ready to take much credit for Weah's success.

"Philip has a passion for the game

"His attitude will give him what it takes to be successful, not only in soccer, but in life. He's a wonderful young man and I couldn't be happier for him."

Weah has lived a difficult life but he appreciates soccer and Quinn noted that his background has helped him appreciate the game.

"When you grow up and you have everything, you don't think about things," Quinn said. "When you grow up with nothing and you get a little something, you do really appreciate it.

"He has a great attitude toward the game, toward his teammates and toward the coaches."

Isaac Gallegos said his No. 1 goal this football season is to win the starting job as place-kicker at Tusculum College.

"They recruited some talented kickers and I'm looking forward to competing," said the former Christian Academy of Knoxville player via e-mail last week.

Gallegos, who planned to leave this past Saturday for Greeneville to join Head Coach Jerry Odom and the Pioneers' squad, could include himself among those talented kickers.

In his senior year at CAK, he converted 9 of 10 field goal attempts and had a 63 percent touchback percentage as he earned All-Region Class 3A recognition.

At the 2017 Kohls Kicking Senior Challenge, which was held in Atlanta in January, Gallegos charted 9/10 for field goals, including two 55-yarders, which put him in the finals with over 150 other nationally ranked kickers. He also averaged 65 yards on kickoffs.

Gallegos, a 4.5 star place-kicker, ranked in the top 25 percent of all high school kickers in the nation by Kohls Kicking.

"Isaac is one of the hardest working players I've been around," said CAK Head Coach Travis Mozingo. "His dedication to his 'craft' is second to none. The fact that he earned a spot with Tusculum is no surprise to me. It's a result of his commitment to maximizing his potential as a kicker."

Tusculum, which competes in the South Atlantic Conference (NCAA Division II), opens its season Aug. 31 at North Greenville (S.C.) University.

Gallegos has been working all summer in Knoxville to get ready.

"The trainer sent me the summer lifting and conditioning program and I've been doing that all summer, as well as

"I'm looking forward to meeting the team and getting on campus."

Isaac already likes what he has seen of Tusculum and Greeneville.

"I love it," he said. "The town is kind of small, but I love it. It's great."

Gallegos grew up in Knoxville and attended CAK throughout high school. He started attending CAK in the sixth grade.

Like many kickers do, Isaac got into the sport of football from playing soccer.

"Yes, I grew up loving soccer and still love it. It will always be a part of me."

Gallegos plans to have a double major in Business Administration and Finance.

"My ultimate goal is to be a sports agent," he said. "I also own my own business (ILG Lawn Care and Landscaping) and look forward to growing it."

Gallegos was the sixth CAK player from last season's senior class to sign to play college football - "a stat we're proud of," said Coach Mozingo.

August 7, 2017 www.knoxfocus.com Hard work paying off for Cherokees

By Alex Norman

In 2016 the South-Doyle Cherokees got hot at the right time, even if few that weren't in South Knox County expected it to happen.

The Cherokees rattled off 3 straight playoff victories over Morristown East, Gibbs, and Morristown West, before falling to eventual 5A state champion Farragut in the state semifinals. That was the first time that the Cherokees had advanced that far in the postseason.

This all happened one year after South-Doyle finished 0-10.

"I hope they still underestimate us," joked South-Doyle Head Coach/Athletic Director Clark Duncan. "I think people realized that even when we were 0-10 we weren't that bad of a football team. We were in just about every game, but just couldn't get over the hump and we fixed that. I think people recognize our program as being legitimate."

Duncan, now in his 8th year as football coach and 13th year as athletic director at South-Doyle, has built this program from the ground up. In 2013 they won a playoff game and in 2014 they started the season 12-0 including two playoff victories.

All the hard work is paying off.

Looking to 2017 there is a lot to look forward to, with eight starters back on offense and seven back on defense. One of the keys will be replacing Caleb Wender at quarterback. He passed for 2465 yards and 21 touchdowns in 2016.

"We feel like we've got two good ones," said Duncan. Mason Brang and A.J. Dunn are competing for the job. Both of them are gonna play. The best thing about it is they have a lot of talent around them."

Brang and Dunn saw very limited action at quarterback in 2016, and they'll certainly have some weapons to make the transition much easier in this multiple offense/zone read attack.

"We like to spread it out get to multiple people," said Duncan.

The Cherokees have to replace Kent'ta Tanner at running back, who rushed for 1623 yards and 18 scores one year ago. Enter Elijah Young, who had 597 rush yards and 3 touchdowns, along with 196 receiving yards and 7 touchdowns in 2016.

SOUTH-DOYLE FOOTBALL 2017

that has more talent than anyone I have ever coached. He is a phenomenal athlete and played lot as a freshman."

Duncan also had high praise for Ton'Quez Ball, who had 950 receiving yards and 9 touchdowns last year. "He is our most potent returning guy, and plays both ways at wide receiver and defensive back. He was the sophomore of the year in KIL and is a multi-faceted guy."

Of course if the quarterbacks don't have time to throw and there are no holes for the running backs to travel through, that skill would go for naught. But that doesn't seem to be an issue at South-Doyle.

"We return 4 of 5 (offensive linemen) up front," said Duncan. "We are huge too. They will average around 350 pounds and they are athletic. They lift weights and can move and that is exciting."

There is a big change that Cherokees fans will notice when they visit the stadium for the first home game on September 1st against

"Elijah is a sophomore Cherokee. The Cherokees have installed their new artificial turf thanks to the donation from Pilot Flying J and the Haslam Family.

"I have been in Knox County for 36 years and for 36 years I would have told you this would never happen," said Duncan. "Not one school let alone all 13 Knox County high schools. What the Haslam family has done is beyond belief. To have a million dollar gift out here, I feel like I am 5 years old and it is Christmas every day.

Duncan added, "For practice, we had to paint the field every other day, the spacing was not always right ... but on this field we can get spacing correct and that is huge. We don't have to move around and kill the grass. You don't have to mow, fertilize ... you show up and practice and that's it. The kids come down here every day and we talk about it every day. And I talk to them every day because I want them to be appreciative of it, and they are."

SEYMOUR FOOTBALL 2017 Seymour looks to # build on recent gridiron success

By Ken Lay Seymour High School football coach Jerry Cooper is hoping that his can team can build on some recent modest success.

"We've had back-toback winning seasons for the first time in 10 years," said Cooper, who begins his fourth season at the school. "We were 6-5 last year and it was kind of a strange year. We started 4-0 and then we lost four in a row and then we were able to come back and win two of our last three ballgames.

"It was an upand-down year."

The four-game slide began with an overtime loss to Sullivan East. It took a while but the Eagles, who made the playoffs and finished 7-4 in 2015 before losing to eventual Class 4A State Champion Catholic, rebounded and finished the 2016 campaign on a high note. Seymour defeated Cocke County 46-26 in a bowl game to clinch a second straight winning season.

"We had that tough overtime loss against Sullivan East and then we lost to Cherokee, Grainger and Scott," Cooper said. "But we bounced back and we beat Volunteer 24-0.

"I was really proud of our guys for the way they battled back last year and turned things around. That was a big win for us against Cocke County."

The Eagles were young last season and many starters return with a year of experience. But the youth movement is still going through Seymour, which opens the new season at home against David Crockett on Aug. 18.

"We played six freshmen and lettered seven or eight sophomores," Cooper said. "We had 14 underclassmen who lettered and for us to be successful, some of those guys are really going to have to step up for us again."

The Eagles look to be strong on the offensive front as they return three starters on the line.

Top returners for the Eagles include: Isiah Kitts (senior, tight end/ defensive lineman); Taylor Hickman (junior, offensive tackle); Justin Isaacs (senior, offensive guard); Trace Brown (sophomore, defensive end); Tyler Cooper (a senior who will move from quarterback to wide receiver in 2017); Naaman Webb (junior, split end/wingback/defensive back); Jeremiah Cataline (junior, wingback/ defensive back); Grayson Campbell (sophomore, quarterback); Gabe Kitts (sophomore, running back/linebacker) and Eli Kwansey (sophomore, offensive tackle/ defensive lineman), Seymour will compete in Region 2-5A with the likes of Halls, Carter, Gibbs, Central and rival South Doyle.

Seymour's program is on the upswing and coach Cooper said expectations are simple.

"We're going to compete," he said.

Warriors prepare for new football challenges

By Ken Lay

As the 2017 high school football season looms, Christian Academy of Knoxville prepares to sail unchartered waters.

County's top teams for the past decade, will make the move to Division II after a long successful stint in Division I that saw them win back-to-back Class 3A State Championships in 2011 and 2012. CAK has made mulin previous years.

But now, the Warriors, who went 9-3 last season, will play a different and possibly more competitive brand of miliar opponents.

CAK will compete in Divi-

"We know Grace and we The Warriors, one of Knox know Webb, but other than that, we're playing teams that we don't know."

illustrious four-year career at CAK and he's the latest in a long line of successful quarterbacks to play for the Warriors, but the question that remains is, who will be the next field general to follow Smith, Charlie High and Quinn Epperly?

That question remains unanswered.

"If I had to pick a starting quarterback today, I don't know who it would be," Mozingo said. "We may go into our opening game with intentions of using two or three guarterbacks.

> "We have three guvs.

Mozingo said that the Warriors (who return five offensive starters and seven on defense) are a "hard-working and close-knit group with good leadership at the skill positions."

The main area of concern for CAK is depth on the line of scrimmage on both sides of the ball.

Key players for the Warriors include: Howell; Claborn; Simpson; Dalton; Grant Richardson (senior, running back/linebacker); Baker Benfield (senior, defensive back); Daniel Plese (senior, running back/

By Steve Williams

young Central High football team to be successful this season could rest on the play of its experienced offensive line.

Bobcats' 2016 Class 4A state runner-up squad graduated, but their O-line returns intact.

"Right now, based on what we have, we think our running game can be strong because of the five returning linemen coming back," said CHS Head Coach Bryson Rosser.

The Bobcats are not only grizzly up front. They're big.

"Anytime you have good linemen, you're able to do a lot," added Rosser. "They're able to give you some time to throw the ball and be able to run the ball when you need it, so we hope to be balanced again."

Enter sophomore Dakota The key for a talented but Fawver, a transfer from Carter who is projected to be Central's starting quarterback. He's a perfect fit for the Bobcat attack.

"He's a dual threat guy," said Offensive skill players on the Rosser. "He can run it and throw it. He's a very smart kid, so he makes good decisions with the football."

> The 5-10, 192-pound Fawver probably was the top freshman QB in Knox County last fall. He was Carter's starter. He transferred and participated in spring practice at Central.

> Eight players from the 2016 Central team moved on to college football on scholarship, including four all-staters - quarterback Trey Mitchell, defensive lineman Isaac Buell, running back Jadarius Sackie and safety Rondrow Peebles.

> The Bobcats, 12-3 last season, also have five starters back on defense, including junior strong safety Xavier Washington, senior cornerback Edward Brodie and senior linebackers Seth Armstrong, Marcus Johnson and Ty Bradford, who played defensive end last fall.

CENTRAL FOOTBALL 2017

Coach Rosser was asked if he looked at 2017 as a rebuilding year or reloading year.

"I consider it a reloading year," he said. "This team is pretty talented. We're just very young."

Rosser said "athleticism" will be the team's strength on the defensive side of the line. "We'll be able to move a bunch of different guys around, present a lot of different looks, which hopefully will put us in some good situations to be successful. This team is very close to being as athletic as last year's team."

Probable starters on offense include running backs Trey'sean Moore and Michael Miburo and wide receivers Braden Gaston, CJ Johnson and Darrius Caswell.

Defensively, probable starters include linemen Jalynn Clemons (5-9, 285) and Devone Moss, linebacker Malik Robinson, cornerback Daunte Holliday and free safety Demetrien Johnson.

Senior Ian Cummins will handle the place-kicking and punting duties. CJ Johnson and Eli Sharp are holders. Gaston and Holliday will return kicks.

Rosser calls the shots on offense and Nick Craney is defensive coordinator. There are two new assistants on the staff - defensive line coach Terrell Rollins and offensive line coach Larry Neely, former assistant and interim head coach at Powell.

As the TSSAA begins a new classification cycle, Central is in Region 2-5A, along with Sevier County, Seymour, Halls, Carter, South-Doyle and Gibbs.

"I know South-Doyle and Gibbs are pretty good," said Coach Rosser. "They've got some really good teams coming back, so they'll be competing at the top, and obviously we would like to be up there with them and fighting for a championship."

Central will open the season on Aug. 17 at Tennessee High in Bristol.

Stokes and senior outside linebacker Cal Cook head the short list of returning starters.

"Zach was the Defensive Lineman of the Year in the region last year," said Brown. "He is 6-foot, 325 pounds and can move. He may be one of the most physical players l've ever coached. He's got a great work ethic, a high-motored kid. He squatted 600 pounds this preseason in the weight room. He knows how to work and he's a big-time leader for this football team.

"Cal is going to be a three-year starter. He's 6-4, about 220 pounds. He's another really physical football player and really good athlete. He's also a very good baseball player.

"Those two kids have a good chance to play at the next level."

Cornerback Juan Davis and end Zion McCray also return on defense. Other probable starters on that side of the line include end Tyrece Edwards, outside linebacker Drew Francis, inside linebackers Ben Skvara and William Savoy plus safeties Demarcus Nelson and Harrison Killian and either Omarian Wright or Xavier Davis at cornerback.

Senior quarterback Drake Peer started five games last season and senior Reid Britton (5-10, 221) returns at guard.

The team has a three-way battle going on at running back between Grant Tierney, Jason Eskridge and Trariq Hardin. Preston Wardell is No. 1 at fullback.

Other probable starters on offense include wide receivers Daniel Leadbetter, Jackson Snodgrass and Michael Webb.

Joining Britton as starters in the O-line are expected to be center Tarel Holloway (5-10, 260), guard Amir Dalal (5-9, 250) and tackles Will Babb (5-11, 211) and Tyrell Ragland (6-0, 241).

Logan Bowers returns as place-kicker, Sebastian Latorre will be the punter and Juan Davis will return kicks.

West will open its season at home against rival Bearden on Saturday night, Aug. 19.

Blueprints

My daughter's adopted home is Portland, Oregon and so I pay special attention to what goes on there. And Portland is again in the news. Portland is like Knoxville in a lot of ways, including being a haven for the homeless. However, Portland is a bigger city than Knoxville and like other big cities has problems with poverty, drugs and crime. There are many causes for these social problems, but one notable observation is that they all seem to be run by Democrats or liberalprogressives who masquerade as Democrats.

A recent Portland controversy arose with the release of an illegal alien from police custody. Because this man had a history of illegal activity and had been deported twenty previous times, ICE should have been notified, but wasn't because Portland is a sanctuary city which refuses to obey Federal law. The man subsequently broke into the home of a sixty year old woman, beat her up, raped her and then stole her car. I'm told that Knoxville's mayor, Madeline Rogero, is sympathetic to the sanctuary city movement. I vehemently oppose making Knoxville a sanctuary city.

The latest controversy comes from the Oregon Health and Science University in Portland. As reported in the magazine, Science, a research team at the University has been able to manipulate the DNA of a human embryo. Researchers in China have reported similar though less sophisticated experiments. The Portland group used the CRISPR gene editing technology to change the embryo's DNA, the blueprint of a human being. CRISPR stands for clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic repeats. I don't want to get lost in technical jargon and weeds. If you're interested you can Google articles on the widely used CRISPR technology. I'm more interested in the ethics of human DNA modification.

Experts maintain that we are a long way from designer babies or the cloned humans in Star Wars movies. However, several important issues are raised by human DNA research. Would it be ethical to reengineer the DNA of a person with a genetic disease like sickle cell anemia? This type of anemia occurs when the amino acid valine is substituted for another amino acid (glutamic acid) in the hemoglobin molecule. As a result, the oxygen carrying hemoglobin protein is less soluble, and more easily precipitates in the circulation, especially with dehydration or other stresses like infections. Precipitated hemoglobin deforms the red blood cell into a sickle-like configuration readily visible under a microscope. The sickled cells get trapped in capillaries and cause strokes, heart attacks and severe bone pain. I've cared for these poor patients and if I could fix the defect and cure the disease I would.

Both our DNA and experiences make each of us unique. Even identical twins with the same DNA have defining idiosyncrasies undoubtedly due to what they learn from different experiences. Our DNA is the unique blueprint for each of us, so altering a person's DNA changes every cell in the body, far more profoundly than any cosmetic surgery. Philosophically, I have less ethical concerns about manipulating a person's DNA to treat a medical disease like sickle cell anemia. However, I wonder if this technique might become a slippery slope for genetic manipulation and used for less noble reasons.

I don't believe humans currently have the wisdom to be tinkering with the blueprints of life. What if a gene were discovered for homosexuality. Many activists maintain that sexual orientation is a genetic issue rather than a learned response or an exercise of rebellion against convention. Would it be ethical for a couple to be tested to see if they carry a gene for homosexuality which might be passed on to their child? Or would it be ethical for a pregnant woman to have her baby tested for homosexuality and then alter the baby's DNA in utero?

Let's take it a step further. What if CRISPR or some future technology allows parents to choose the sex, eye color or intelligence of their baby. Would it be ethical to modify humans to produce a race of Nordic Einsteins?

The two fundamental questions of human existence are, where did we come from and what is our purpose? I was recently introduced to a new concept called evolutionary psychology. These "experts" bypass the first question and explore the second in evolutionary terms.

Most scientists believe humans have advanced through natural selection as described by Charles Darwin in the mid-19th century. The evolutionary psychologists purport to explain all human and animal behavior through something called the "selfish gene" hypothesis. Simply put, humans -and animals act to perpetuate their genes through procreation. As the atheist Richard Dawkins says, "We are survival machines robot vehicles blindly programed to preserve the selfish molecules known as genes." Even ideas are for self promotion.

Interestingly, these are not new ideas. C. S. Lewis wrestled with similar concepts in the mid 20th century. Lewis asks the question why a soldier in a foxhole would throw himself on a grenade and save his comrades. The American famous scientist and atheist Stephen Gould rejects the hyper-Darwinism in evolutionary psychology. These "experts" see our only purpose is to preserve genetic lineage, and the soldier merely acts to save the genetic line of his mates. Lewis argued that the soldier acts out of sacrificial love, a concept the Greeks call agape.

Though I am a scientist by training I have come to embrace the notion that there is more than I can know and there is an absolute by which I measure myself and everything else. In fact, I believe it takes far greater faith to propose that the universe, including humans, came into being by chance. This same concept holds that seven monkeys in a room with typewriters would eventually type Hamlet. I put my faith in the Intelligent Designer.

And the purpose of mankind is to recognize and be thankful for the wondrous love and grace built into the universe and in each of us.

Humans perceive many types of love, and though I may not be able to perceive all its manifestations, but I know it when I feel it. And so, all my days I will sing the praises of the Creator, the source of love and all that is.

Abraham needed to believe that God could bring life (a son) out of the deadness of Sarah's womb and his own inability to father a child with her. He had to believe that what God promised him were so true that God could address them as if they happened already.

keep Abraham from believing that God would do as he promised. One of our challenges is to keep believing day in and day out that what we see with our physical eyes is not the whole story. The spiritual realm is just as real. Paul calls the spiritual realm "the heavenly realms" in Ephesians. Our faith, likewise, is based on the Word of God (Scripture) and his living Word, Jesus. It is not based on the things of this world that will not last. Keep your faith in Jesus Christ as you trust him each day. Live out your faith, for faith is a verb. It is action oriented. And give thanks for God's marvelous grace.

August 7, 2017 www.knoxfocus.com Family quilts are covered in memories

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus. com

Do you have a quilt made by a relative? Isn't it more than just an old quilt?

I have a quilt stitched by my grandmother and her quilting bee. It had belonged to my mother and, after she passed, I received the quilt.

Family quilts are more than bed covers-they are pieces of art and a comforting bit of history. Sometimes we don't use them on the beds or covering furniture but prize them in plastic or hang them on the wall. I'm not sure if that is just a "Southern Thing" but I know I prize my family quilt. It bears my grandmother's name on the border and when it was stitched.

"Stitched by Mattie Douglas, 1995," the inked note reads. My grandmother must have worked on the quilt the same year she died, at age 96 years of age.

Hand-made quilts serve as reminders of family events like births, weddings, military service, and the death of loved ones. The East Tennessee Historical Society recognizes the importance of quilts and many are on display now in "Stories in Stitches: Quilts from East Tennessee Permanent Collection."

Who made the quilts

A quilt stitched by my late grandmother and a memory for me visiting her and seeing the women sitting around the quilting frame working and socializing. How many quilts she produced in her many years is anyone's guess.

in your family? Why did they choose the pattern? What caused the stain that seems to stay? These are some of the mysteries that quilt historians try to address through genealogical research and technical analysis.

The featured exhibit of quilts at the Museum of East Tennessee History at 601 South Gay Street runs from August 7 to January 2. More than two dozen quilts with dates ranging from 1802 through 2001 will be displayed. "Stories in Stitches" is dedicated to Linda Claussen and Ginny Rogers for their years of service and support of the society's quilt collection. ETHS, founded in 1834, received its first quilt in 1992, a year before the museum opened. The collection includes quilts from 35 counties and the acquisitions committee continues to review additions, evaluating a quilt's history, condition and importance.

The quilts will be displayed as part of the "Voices of the Land: The People of East Tennessee" exhibit. All the quilts are kept in climate-controlled storage and brought out for special occasions.

Quilts on display include patterns like "Rose of Sharon" and "Knoxville Crazy Quilt" to originals such as a Civil War memory quilt and one pieced together from clothing labels.

The Museum of East Tennessee is open 8 a.m. until 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Saturdays and 1 p.m. until 5 pm. on Sundays. Admission is $5 for adults, $4 for seniors and there's no charge for children's admission.

You can contact the museum at (865) 215-8824 or find them online at www.easttnhistory.org.
