Muse Knoxville is excited to announce a generous $25,000 donation from Food City to create a brand-new Mini Food City exhibit, set to debut later this year. This interactive addition will bring fresh energy to the museum's Live Smart, Stay Well area, one of its most popular

Designed to mirror a real grocery store, the Mini Food City exhibit will inspire hands-on, imaginative play while teaching essential life skills like decision-making, teamwork, and financial literacy. Young visitors can role-play as shoppers, cashiers, and stock clerks-encouraging social interaction, early math skills, and nutritional awareness in a fun, engaging environment.

"We are deeply grateful to Betsi James and the entire Food City team for their incredible generosity and commitment to fostering learning through play," said Allison Comer, Executive Director of Muse Knoxville. "This partnership represents the power of community collaboration and its impact on the next generation of learners."

Changes suggested for Knox County Commission rules

steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Knox County Rules Committee met Tuesday to review several rules governing meetings and discussed changes in the processes involving right of way and road closures, commission and committee appointments, and the agenda consent list. The committee also discussed the duties of the chair and vice chair and changing the name of the Community Development Corporation.

At-large Commissioner Kim Frazier chaired the meeting and heard recommendations on the various items. Most of the changes would clarify language. Law Director David Buuck told the meeting that public notice of appointing an elected official is required but noted the selection of non-elected members to a board or committee would not require a public notice and would appear on the agenda as an item for a vote. The public hearing has to be at least seven days before an elected official is replaced. Buuck referenced the resignation of a former Knox County Trustee.

Buuck also said that closing of a right of way, while often considered on two votes, only requires one reading and one vote.

Frazier said the membership of both the county commission chair and vice chair on the Community Development Corporation is not required and only the chair should be the member. She also said that the organization will now be called the "Joint Economics and Community Development Board.

All the changes will now go to the full commission's February meeting and the Rules Committee will meet again on April 22.

Task force begins reviews of city rules, charter

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

The task force assigned to review all of the Knoxville City Council rules and work on updating the city's charter began Tuesday with a brief organization meeting. Councilwoman Lynne Fugate chaired the meeting of those current and former council members appointed to delve into the current way meetings are held and then look at revising the charter.

Fugate was joined by council members Tommy Smith, Amelia Parker and Debbie Helsley and former council members Finbarr Saunders and Nick Pavlis. Former city policy director Bill Lyons is also a member and said he would also seek out suggestions from the Baker Center.

The task force has two assignments: review the rules of each council meeting, including the public forum, and review the current charter. Fugate suggested, and the members agreed, to first take a look at the council rules and later look at the char-

Parker arrived a little late and said she was interested in the rules on public comment and in seeing if there are contrasting rules that exist in the state. Fugate suggested that City Recorder Will Johnson also provide suggestions on rule changes.

Fugate asked the former city council members to confer with other former members for suggestions.

The task force agreed to meet again on February 18 and monthly thereafter during its nine months

President Trump Gave A Positive, Hopeful Inaugural Address

By John J. Duncan Jr. duncanj@knoxfocus.com

It was entirely predictable and at times almost humorous to see the sour, partisan reaction by Joe Biden, Kamala Harris, Hillary Clinton, and some in the national media to President Trump's inaugural address

It was obvious that Biden, Harris and Mrs. Clinton are still bitter over Trump's two victories and it seemed very painful for them to have to listen to him advocate so many things that are so popular with the majority of the American

And while Biden and Harris wanted to keep pouring billions of dollars down the rat hole in Ukraine, most Americans agreed with Trump when he said the government cannot manage even a simple domestic crisis "while at the same time stumbling into a continuing catalogue of catastrophic events

And the great majority especially agreed with Trump when he added: "We have a government that has given unlimited Jen Psaki, President funding to the defense of foreign borders but refuses to defend American borders, or more importantly, its own people."

many of Trump's new executive orders were to undo things Biden had done. The executive order that I was most pleased about was Trump issuing pardons to over 1,500 J6 defendants, as they are called, and commute the sentences of about 14 others to time served.

Almost all these defendants were patriotic Americans who simply walked around the Capitol that day after going through doors held open for them by Capitol Police.

The Democratic J6 Committee covered up most of the films taken that day and refused to release them. It was only after Kevin McCarthy became speaker of the House and ordered the release of the films that the true story came out. People could then see how peaceful most of these people were and how the Democrats had so greatly them on his first day to do exaggerated the events of

The few who destroyed property or actually assaulted police should have been punished. But most were given very excessive sentences solely due to hatred for President Trump, and many were held in jail without trials longer than is usual even for people who have committed far more serious crimes.

Probably my strongest support group throughout my career has been by local law enforcement, and I liked all the Capitol Police. But the truth is that they had about the safest law enforcement jobs there were, and 99% of the time were just very nice, highlypaid tour guides.

President Trump will get strong pushback on everything he wants to do, but almost all items that were mentioned in his address are things the great major-gave me a good excuse to spend last Monday watching the inauguration festivities for President-elect Donald Trump to once again return to the White House. It was a historic occasion as only one former president has ever been returned to the White House after having lost an election. John F. Having served as president for four years previously and having another four years to contemplate a return to that high office, Donald Trump was uniquely prepared to return to the White House. Trump's second inaugural address was plain-spoken and to the point at a time when few things are. It was an excellent speech. Trump pledged, "We will forge a society that is color-blind and merit-based." It was the death knell of DEI, which has nothing to do with merit.

Trump, with a sweep of his pen, revoked the security clearances of the 51 ex-intelligence officials who lied when they stated the Hunter Biden laptop was nothing but "Russian disinformation." Trump rolled back the federal DEI requirements imposed by Joe Biden and knocked the EV mandate in the head. At the end of the day, President Trump signed almost 100 new executive orders.

School Choice is the Rising Tide that Lifts All Boats

While Tennessee's public schools have made significant strides in recent years, it is clear that many students, especially those from disadvantaged backgrounds, still face barriers to academic success. With only 39% of Tennessee students currently meeting grade-level expectations, we must continue to find innovative solutions that give all children the best chance to succeed. The EFA bill offers an exciting solution to this challenge by providing families with the flexibility to choose the educational path that best meets their child's needs. This bill is not about replacing public schools but about enhancing educational opportunities by giving families more

Heroic

Donald J. Trump

In my lifetime there have been nineteen presidential inaugurations, but I can remember only a few. And ashamedly, I have rarely watched the presidential oath of office. Nor have I paid attention to the pomp and pageantry of presidential inauguration festivities. But January 20, 2025, was different. Others have noted a new attitude of hope, confidence and even renewed patriotism.

Nonetheless, hatred still burns in the hearts of lost souls like the activist Episcopal pseudo-priest who presided over the presidential prayer service at the National Cathedral. She turned the traditional ceremony into a divisive leftist diatribe before hustling off for appearances on CNN and The View. If I

I was saved by God to wouldn't go to church. The make America great again. country wants unity, whereas her Progressive "weaponization of the pulpit" is Musk. the reason why mainline denominational churches are dying. Apparently, the separation of church and state doesn't apply to

> Perhaps the unprecedented interest in inaugural events was because the weather drove the ceremonies indoors and allowed citizens to have a ringside seat to watch on television. Perhaps the renewed interest resulted from the destruction we've experienced over the last four years. It is undeniable that Washington is broken and making subtle changes by either party stands no chance of fixing the generational corruption. What gives us hope is that we elected a disrupter of the status quo. The image of Donald Trump taking the oath of office in the paintings was heroic and only delusional anti-Americans driven by ideology or hatred can deny it.

Americans want to believe in our government again. "Biden promised normalcy and delivered chaos" (Ben Domenech). Donald Trump is our new president and offers us a way forward. He is not a traditional Republican nor is he a Democrat, although he was once a Democrat; but so were Tulsi Gabbard, RFK Jr., Joe Rogan and Elon

The best descriptor of Trump is that he wants to "Make America Great Again." It is stunning that Democrats and RINOs oppose this. Trump did not need to be president and has suffered mightily to lead us again. He was highly successful in his first career as leader of his company and family. But because he saw his country's need, he embarked on a second career as leader of the MAGA movement and he is now a historical president of the United States again.

I regularly pray for strength and courage, as well as discernment and wisdom. During the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln was reported to have said, "Many times I have been driven on my knees with the conviction that all my backdrop of John Trumbull me were insufficient for the problems of the day." I pray for President Trump, Vice President Vance and our leaders, just as I regularly prayed for Biden and confused, conflicted, lost souls to hopefully bring them discernment, wisdom and salvation.

I have written about my struggle with forgiveness. Perhaps President Trump is right, saying, "Success is the best revenge." However, I believe it is poetic justice that Biden and Kamala had to sit and listen to President Trump's inaugural address when he took them to the woodshed. Their life aspirations were discredited by Trump and rejected by America.

My father was a naval officer and ran a tight ship in my childhood home. My brothers and I were never spanked, even if we deserved it. Most have seen drill sergeants with new recruits as in the movie "An Officer and a Gentleman." My brothers and I were kept in line by the threat of a woodshed harangue by Captain Ferguson, far worse than a spanking. Perhaps Biden and Kamala have been punished enough by being shamed by President Trump on national television.

Becky and I are reading a fascinating book, "Elon Musk," by Walter Isaacson. While I read science fichad to listen to her bilge, I Capitol Rotunda beneath a faculties and those around tion and she likes the

I believe Elon Musk and unique individuals of the last 50 years. Musk saved free speech by purchasing Twitter and removing censorship. He is committed to sustainable energy use, producing Tesla vehicles and roof solar panels. His Starlink satellite communication system is renowned and his Neuralink system is integrating computer connection to the brain, something I have written about in my science fiction novels. And oh, by the way, he launches rockets and is committed to expanding humanity to Mars and beyond. Isaacson writes well and his extensive research brings Musk to life for the reader. Elon Musk is a complicated figure. One quote sums it up, Musk is a "manic genius who thrives on drama and risk-taking." If you don't want to read the book, I recommend Musk's interview with Joe Rogan on his podcast recorded days before the November 5, 2024, election.

It is a mistake to think you know someone by reading a book, but background information helps with the composite. Musk has Asperger syndrome and his social awkwardness and mannerisms have nothing to do with Nazi salutes.

We know more about ly. And it's a good couple's President Trump, but have we been told the truth about 47? Our background Donald Trump are the most information was largely from the now-discredited legacy media. I never watched "The Apprentice" nor have I read a book about Trump, but I watched and listened to him carefully in his first term. No one is perfect, but he has triumphed over the forces of darkness, impeachments, lawfare, Democrats and even assassins who are hell-bent on destroying > Historians have long argued whether history causes great men to arise or whether leaders produce history. I suspect it is both, though there are notables like Einstein, Musk or President Trump who seem to tip the scale to the individual. Perhaps Abraham Lincoln would have been a great president without the Civil War, but arguably Lincoln gained heroic stature by saving the Union during the Civil War.

So, I challenge you to pray for our country and our leaders. Prayer is powerful and always right.

This new vehicle will be a 2022-2025 Pathfinder. One huge reason for choosing this SUV is that I struggle to get down into and up out of sedans. I need something that allows me to open the door, step out and be on my feet at once.

Another reason for a Pathfinder is that I haul wood for projects in the car. The interior is covered so that no tears or scuffs are inflicted. I also have to have a tow package to pull the trailer that hauls lawnmowers and mulch and all sorts of things. Of course, I still need to learn the tricks of backing the trailer into life, fighting for his country, overcoming a serious handicap at a time when there were little or no concessions to people with disabilities, and serving six years in the U.S. House of Representatives. Miller was the kind of man who was used to overcoming obstacles and the odds. When the tide turned against him, William Miller never complained, much less whined. Miller was a man of unquestioned bravery and very real character who stuck to his core beliefs with the steadfastness of one who knew he was right. Named for one of the most famous orators of his age, William Jennings Bryan, Bill Miller was of the other political faith, being a Republican.

The Hartford Courant remembered Miller as having "attained a remarkable degree of success despite a physical handicap that would have discouraged a less courageous man." The Courant saluted Miller's political courage, noting Miller "wore nobody's collar when he was in Congress." The newspaper lauded Miller's ability to ignore the leadership of his own political party when he thought it wrong, as "he voted as his conscience dictated." Few members of the House ans' affairs than William J. Miller, who had been in and out of veterans' hospitals from the time he lost both legs in the First World War until 1931. Miller won the respect of his colleagues on matters relating to veterans and once the House rose as one to give him a standing ovation. Bill Miller never hesitated to tell able-bodied veterans they needed to stand on their own two feet.

Wimer, the Arthur Hartford Courant's veteran Washington correspondent, thought Miller was gifted with "the down-toearth common man" touch. Wimer was initially surprised by Miller's "almost boundless energy," as well the congressman's remarkable "ability to grasp the precise fundamentals of a situation." The journalist also admired Miller's "stubborn independence" from the leadership of his own Republican party during his first term in the House. Wimer marveled at Miller's "unusually cheery disposition." That same streak of indemore notice than was usual for freshmen legislators and won him the cooperation of numerous congressmen on the other side of the aisle. It was Bill Miller's ability to win Democrats to his side that helped kill off the excessively low price

pendence afforded Miller

William Jennings Miller ceilings imposed by the made the most of his short federal government, which caused typewriter companies in Connecticut to refuse to do business with the government. "I am a firm believer in the twoparty system," Miller once said, "but sometimes I wish the voters wouldn't take it so darned seriously."

> Bill Miller liked to campaign as a non-politician and once he returned a large contribution to his campaign, writing he had already met the full budget for his campaign and the contribution could better be used for a candidate not so fortunate. That attitude won him a new friend and client for his insurance business who liked the congressman's honesty.

Voters had to be impressed by the fact that Miller, whose legs were amputated just below the hip, drove himself to meetings and appearances throughout the First for the U.S. House of Congressional District. Miller's car was devised so that he could drive it despite his handicap. Upon arrival at his given destination, Miller transferred himself to his wheelchair and Herman P. Miller's home state of Connecticut was, at least during his political career, a raging battleground state and went back and forth between the candidates of the two major political parties. Yet Bill Miller always seemed to run just a little bit ahead of his fellow Republicans inside his own district.

Miller had been a combat pilot during the First World War and was testing a plane when it crashed, leaving him severely injured with a broken back. The crash mangled Miller's legs so badly that both had to be amputated. Bill Miller spent the better part of six years in hospitals, but once he was free of hospitals, doctors and nurses, he got married, started his own business and answered the call of public service. In 1936 much of Connecticut was ravaged by a terrible flood and Miller was the commander of the Nutmeg State's American Legion, where he guided and supervised the relief work to the victims of the Senator Lonergan lost his reelection bid to John Danaher and Congressman Kopplemann lost to William J. Miller in a three-way race where the Socialist candidate polled an astonishing 24,718 votes (15.66%). Miller topped Congressman Kopplemann by just over 4,000 votes.

During his first term in Congress, William J. Miller made a significant contribution in the crafting of legislation that later became known as the "G. I. Bill of Rights." Miller appeared countless times before the committee drafting the bill to testify as to the needs of veterans. the House considered the bill, Congressman Harry P. Jeffreys of Ohio got to his feet and praised Miller's help and untiring effort to mold the legislation. Nobody in the House of Representatives was stronger for an amendment to the "G. I. Kopplemann and his wife motored down to Pinehurst, North Carolina, for a bit of golf and then onto Palm Beach where they would remain for the winter. Kopplemann announced his candidacy and quickly discovered there were from Senator Lonergan in 1938. Kopplemann's effort had been unsuccessful, and many Democrats thought the division had cost both Lonergan and the congressman reelection that year. As the election returns began trickling in, it was readily apparent Democrats had done very well in the Nutmeg State. Kopplemann reclaimed his seat in the House of Representatives, winning by just under 17,000 votes. Congressman Bill Miller conceded the election even before all the returns were

> Two years later, Bill Miller was eager for a rematch. Congressman Kopplemann was well-entrenched, having ladled out considerable largesse during the height of the New Deal. Miller evidently never stopped campaigning, continuing to speak throughout the First District and visit with folks. Congressman Kopplemann hit Miller hard on his opposition to the Selective Service Bill; Bill Miller favored universal military service instead, a point Kopplemann never mentioned. The fourth rematch between Bill Miller and Herman Kopplemann occurred during the 1944 election. Listening to the election returns on the radio, Miller heard an announcer say Kopplemann was carrying Hartford County by approximately 20,000 votes. "That does it," Miller said crisply. With his usual good grace, Bill Miller told his friends and supporters, "I am grateful to all those who helped in my campaign. I want to say that I'd rather have the friendship and respect of those with whom I've worked than be president of the United States."

> Miller told the Hartford Courant, "I've done my best. When the voters speak there is no appeal. I accept their verdict."

Bill Miller and his wife took his second defeat philosophically, but the congressman tried his best to comfort the one who took his loss the hardest: 10-year-old Dawson Trenchard, who had been eagerly carrying messages between the candidate and the telephone desk where returns were being reported. "I've been trying to tell him for a week that it might happen and that it's just one of those things," Miller told a reporter. The congressman gently reminded the tearful boy they would once again be next-door neighbors with him out of Congress. Even in defeat, Bill Miller had run at the top of the Republican ticket.

Once again, Miller continued running and he and Herman Kopplemann fought their last electoral tussle in 1946.

The pattern held true: Herman Kopplemann had won the First District during presidential election years while Bill Miller carried it in the off-year elections. Miller won the general election by just under 11,000 votes. It was the end of Kopplemann's career in elective office. The Republicans had won a spectacular victory campaigning on the slogan "Had Enough" under the leadership of the chairman of the Republican National Committee, Carroll Reece. The GOP won both Houses of Congress. It would be the first and only time Bill Miller would serve in the House of Representatives when his party was in the majority. Congressman William J. Miller was proud of his work in the House and sought reelection in the 1948 election. It was the first contest where he did not face Herman Kopplemann. Miller faced a younger, sleeker challenger who would become one of the most successful officeholders in Connecticut's history, Abraham Ribicoff. Virtually every political prognosticator in the country was forecasting GOP presidential nominee Thomas E. Dewey was a sure winner over Harry Truman. So, too, did most everyone think the Republicans would keep the House while some thought there was a chance

The 1948 election has for the Republican Party. Tom Dewey lost to Harry Truman and Republicans took heavy losses in the House and Senate to lose control of Congress to the Democrats. Still running ahead of his ticket, Congressman William J. Miller lost the 1948 election to Abe Ribicoff by more than 24,000 votes.

As always, Bill Miller was gracious in defeat, accepting the vicissitudes of politics. Ribicoff would go on to become governor of Connecticut, Secretary of Health, Welfare & Education under President John F. Kennedy and serve 18 years in the U.S. Senate.

Following his loss in the 1948 election, Miller closed his House office and went back home to his home in Wethersfield, Connecticut. In March of 1949, Bill Miller's body began to fail. The former congressman was plagued by a serious "kidney condition" that kept him confined to his bed for almost a year. Miller was able to get out of bed on his 51st birthday in March 1950. The former congressman suffered from a heart problem which became increasingly worse and led to his death on March 22, 1950.

What is 'bundling' at local legislative meetings?

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

An interesting change has been increasingly used at Knoxville City Council and Knox County Commission meetings recently. A member, often the sponsor of a resolution, can move to "bundle" several items together to be discussed and voted on with one decision.

Bundling happens more often on zoning change requests, where three resolutions regarding the same property are on the agenda. The first would change the sector plan to permit a change, the second would approve a change in the One Year Plan and the third would actually change the zoning.

During a recent city objection all three agenda or more, usually sees request from Knoxville Habitat for Humanity for the Pinehurst Drive property saw "bundling" at work. While there an earlier meeting from neighbors, that objection was resolved and the matter was on the agenda for a second and final vote.

The three ordinances for the Pinehurst property were placed on Tuesday's council agenda, combined into one item, discussed and approved.

is no public or member objection, those "bundled" resolutions or ordinances would be approved in council meeting, the zoning items could be discussed and debated as a whole, rather than arguing each of the three motions separately.

Often the bundling was some objection at saves time and shortens a meeting, especially when there is not public or member discussion. Bundling is similar to "consent" items. Both the commission and the council have agenda items that routinely are placed on the consent list and approved in one vote. Members may suggest In cases where there moving other items to that list and may do so with a majority vote.

Most of the Knox County Commission agenda, one vote. When there is sometimes 40 to 50 items consent items "bundled" together. That includes, by court order, all of the items involving the Knox County School's requests. Most of the other agenda items end up on the consent list, at the request of the chair or members, and are "bundled" and voted on in one vote.

Items on that list may be pulled on request from members and discussed but often are not and go on to being approved. Of the many agenda items only a handful are not on the consent list and are discussed, postponed, deleted or discussed.

off the expense of infraand streets.

The new category to permit residential districts was passed in 2024 by the Tennessee Legislature.

Victoria Kay of the neighborhood group attended the hearing. Since last year she has objected to the zoning of the 85.81 acres that could permit 340 homes to be built. Several other local residents spoke in opposition to the change.

The development is planned apparently for the old Atlas Powder Farm and the Alex Schubert property and Kay says it is not consistent with the surround-

The designation of the Tipton Station property as a residential infrastructure development district passed in a 10-1 vote last week following the hearing with Fifth District Commissioner Angela Russell voting "No."

The Knox County Commission has two Tipton Station Road-related items on its agenda for its regular meeting today. One would approve a memorandum of understanding with the Tipton Station Road property developer, D. R. Horton, Inc., for road improvements at two intersections along Tipton Station Road at Martin Mill Pike and at Maryville Pike. The road improvement MOU was proposed in October and deferred through November and December at the request of the sponsor. Kay said the road structure such as utilities changes proposed would affect the neighbors and possibly lead to the demolition of two homes where the owners were not told of possible plans.

The commission will also discuss "approving certain Policies and Procedures relating to the Consideration of Petitions for the Creation of Infrastructure Development Districts."

As the property was once the home of Atlas Powder which made explosives, Knox County Engineering Director Jim Snowden said that the developer cannot disturb the land until the Tennessee Department of Conservation inspects the acreage for explosive residue. Several conditions were put in place for the approval of the future $82 million development pending the results of the state

Brewster, represented by Benjamin Mullins, said he would accept a "transition" zoning with a time limit on how long campers could remain, saying the gas pipeline project is scheduled to be completed in March. He said there is no real definition of "lodging" in the Knox County Codes.

When asked if any fine has been imposed regarding the violation, Mullins said no but added he thought fines would be issued if the appeal

The commission voted unanimously to deny Brewster's appeal.

Among those requests approved were planned residential developments of up to eight units per acre for 7507 Ball Camp Pike and four

1824 North Campbell Station Road; and rezoning 6350 Clinton Highway from agricultural to general residential, 6356 Clinton Highway to general business, and Zero Parkerhill Lane to planned residential for three units

The request of William Dale Rhoton to change 611 West Governor John Sevier Highway from agricultural zoning to general residential saw former Ninth District Commissioner Mike Brown speak against the request. Brown spoke for the South Doyle Area Homeowners Association and said the cluster of dwellings there would "be out of place."

The original request has been deferred month to month since last request was approved and the change was turned down.

An application from Mesana Investments LLC for 205 North Wooddale Road for six dwellings per acre was postponed for 30 days pending a meeting with the developer and the community after a 6-5 vote. Another Mesana request, to change 6209 Hammer Road to planned residential, was denied.

In other action, the commission voted to rename some roads around the Schaad Road improvements at the request of Jim Snowden, Knox County Engineering and Public Works Director. Ball Road and Bailey Farm Drive will be added to the new road map emerging for use by 911 emergency dispatch.

Golden Bears run past Cedar Bluff to win third straight county title

By Ken Lay

Playing with a nucleus of eighth graders who have been on the hardwood together for three years, the Vine Middle School boys basketball team cruised to its third consecutive Knox County Middle School Basketball Conference Class AA Tournament Championship late last week.

The Golden Bears started fast and ran past Cedar Bluff 72-32 Thursday night in the tournament championship game at Gibbs Middle School. The game was a rematch of last year's title tilt between Vine and the Giants. The Golden Bears won that game 36-25 at Vine, which lost its regular-season finale to Class AAA regular-season and tournament champion Bearden, used its only setback of the season as motivation.

"We lost that game to Bearden, and that was a great game, and that humbled us a little bit," Vine coach Jadarius Suber said. "This group won it as sixth graders and seventh gradas eighth graders."

"The good thing about this is that the sectionals (in middle school) are like the regionals in high school. It's a second chance, and if we win the next four games, we'll be state champs. But it will be a tall order."

Vine had three players score 10-plus points against the Giants. Kavion Stinson led the way with 18 points. Julius Young added 16 and Jahmir Kimbrough added 14.

The Golden Bears and Cedar Bluff will open sectional play on Feb. 1.

All-Tournament Team

Vine had three players named to the alltournament team, including Julius Young, Jahmir Kimbrough and William Dixson, who scored four points in the championship game. Jaimen Barrett and Kymoni Smith were selected to the squad from Cedar Bluff.

The Gibbs Middle School girls basketball team defeated rival Carter to win its second straight KCMSBC Class AA Tournament title. The Lady Eagles prevailed on their home court Wednesday night in Corryton.

Lady Eagles claim second consecutive Class AA MS championship

By Ken Lay

In an event that appeared somewhat uneventful, Gibbs Middle School's girls basketball team won its second consecutive Knox County Middle School Class AA Tournament on its home floor.

The Lady Eagles concluded a perfect league and conference postseason tournament run with a 55-30 victory over rival Carter Wednesday night at Gibbs Middle School. the victory, Corryton's resident girls middle school basketball team claimed a second straight tournament crown and clinched a bid in the state sectional tournament, which opens Feb. 1. The end goal for any basketball team is to win championships but for Gibbs and its coach, C.H. Qualls, what happened after the victory was much more important. It was then when Qualls honored the team's biggest inspiration.

"We have a seventh grader on our team, Eden Shockley, and she was diagnosed with Hodgkin's Lymphoma," Qualls said. "She played in every JV game and every varsity game except on days when she had treatments.

"She just had her last treatment and she's cancer free now. Our team rallied around her. This is a big sisterhood. We were supposed to honor her during another game, but it snowed. And there was no way that I wasn't going to honor that kid." That was the big reason that the Lady Eagles had to celebrate after the victory netted them a second straight tournament championship. The win came rather easily as Gibbs controlled the contest from the outset, opening an 11-6 lead in the first quarter. Despite enduring some offensive troubles out of the gate, the Lady Eagles never trailed. They all but sealed their championship with a 19-4 handily in the contest, but second-quarter surge that gave them a 30-10 advantage at halftime.

In Wednesday night's title game, it was eighth grader Rebekah Spierdowis that carried the bulk of the offensive load for the Lady Eagles. She led all scorers with 29 points, many that came as the result of offensive rebounds as she was a dominant force on the glass.

She was the only Gibbs player to post double figures in the scoring column. Natalie Brown added eight points and Caroline Howard finished with five. "Rebekah was big for us," Qualls said. "We started three eighth graders and two seventh graders and we have a team where every player, 1-through-12 can step up for us."

Gibbs, which features one of the deepest rosters in the Knox County

Middle School Basketball

Conference, prevailed

the Lady Hornets also took plenty of positives away from the title game as they will also play in the State Sectionals.

"We had a young team and we started a bunch of sixth graders," Carter coach Dalton Freels said. "I'm super proud of these girls for making it here. "The future is bright for these girls and for Carter Middle School. I'm proud of this group for the way they represent Carter Middle School." Callie Tull and Paisley Leach scored 12 points each for the Lady Hornets.

The storm was building as kickoff approached

By Tom Mattingly

seasons past are with us on an almost daily basis. It doesn't take much to get the memory banks charged up. Someone says, "I remember the time," and the discussion gets hot and heavy. It's no place for faint hearts

One dominant recollection from across the years was the Friday afternoon walk-though at an opposing stadium. The team plane landed uneventfully, and the team buses headed to the stadium. In those days, everything was quiet, but the storm was building as kickoff approached the next day. It's a time that fans of both sides realize the game is at hand.

If you listened carefully, however, the echoes of Saturday afternoons and evenings past could be carefully discerned. There was enough history in the air to satisfy the most hardened observer. Mention any game or season and a flood of remembrances of the good times following players wearing orange and white come quickly.

It's still only January, but standing on Legion Field, the memories of football there was always a visit to the west side, north end, 31-yard line. That was the spot Tennessee defensive back Albert Dorsey picked off a Ken Stabler pass, one of three he grabbed in the fourth quarter. School was out at 24-13.

That was the game Doug Dickey said was the key moment in his coaching tenure in Knoxville. Tennessee's Mike Jones and Alabama's Dennis Homan fought it out on the cover of the next week's Sports Illustrated.

You could also go to the east side, south end 34-yard line. That's where Alan Cockrell checked off and sent Johnnie Jones around the left end on a play historically called "The Run," also known as "49 Option," 66 yards for a score. The memory is fresh of Jones emerging from the press box shadows into the bright sunshine at the northeast corner where the Tennessee fans were

At Bryant-Denny Stadium in Tuscaloosa, Vol fans could recall defensive back Jason Allen, an Alabama native, making the defensive stop that brought an end to a five-overtime struggle. Mike Hamilton was there, wearing an If you happened to be orange blazer, to welcome a memorable 10-6 decision in November 2003.

Jason home.

If you thought about the Orange Bowl in Miami, you could find the spot near the 33-yard line, west end, from which Vol placekicker Karl Kremser lined up the potential game-winner against Oklahoma on New Year's Night 1968.

Alas, the Orange Bowl is not there anymore, however, having been demolished

If you were at LSU, you could go to the southeast end and see where Steve DeLong and pals made the stop in the 1964 game that ended 3-3, another key game in Dickey's career. That was also the end zone where LSU ran two pass plays in four seconds to beat Ole Miss 17-16 in 1972. Billy Cannon started his famous Halloween night punt return from that Ole Miss 7-3 in 1959.

If the game were at Notre Dame, you could hear John Majors talk about games when he was at Pitt in the mid-1970s. He once said the turf at Notre Dame Stadium "reminded him of a Kansas wheat field." It was also fascinating to be in the dressing room tunnel in which Miami and Notre Dame once slugged it out in the famous "Catholics versus Convicts" game or the visiting team dressing room that came complete with television monitor.

The memory is still fresh of the 1991 game, the contest in which the Vols rallied from 31-7 down to win 35-34. No Tennessee fan could forget the last frantic moment when Jeremy Lincoln blocked the final Notre Dame field goal

If the game were being played at Florida Field, you could stand on either 1-yard line and visualize a 99-yard touchdown drive, one that happened quickly from south to north in 1977, the famed Kelsey Finch TD run. The other was a more workmanlike drive in 1971, north to south, capped by a TD pass from quarterback Phil Pierce to wide receiver end, an 89-yard up the east northeast corner, where sideline that helped defeat officials adjudged a Florida punt going out of bounds inside the Tennessee 1, with Bill Battle earning one of the shortest penalties in the history of the Vol program. Game officials assessed the unsportsmanlike conduct foul by picking the ball up and setting it back down. The ball didn't move. It was that close to the goal.

If you were at Auburn, you could go to the south 33-yard line and imagine a 67-yard TD run in 1998 by Jamal Lewis that was a thing of beauty, happening shortly before he banged up a knee and was lost for the season.

You could also go to the north end 1-yard line, the spot at which Vol defenders stopped Auburn four consecutive times after a turnover had put Vol fortunes in serious jeopardy. Raynoch Thompson led the Vol defensive charge in one of the most memorable moments of that national championship season. That's the beauty of it all, that the memory banks really don't have to work overtime. That's due to the power of history, the power of watching and listening

Bearden holds off West Valley, 42-41

By Steve Williams

The Bearden Middle School boys team and its fans won a nail biter in the Knox County AAA championship game Thursday night.

With the Bulldogs leading by one point, West Valley had the ball and a chance to win. The Wolves' Bode Maupin, who already had hit three 3-pointers in Halls Middle School girls team came alive in the second half and fought off Gresham 37-35 to take third place in the Knox County AAA tournament at South-Doyle Middle Wednesday night.

A 10-3 spurt in the third period gave Halls a 24-21 lead. But it still wasn't over as the Lady Gladiators got the lead back at 30-26. Back-to-back 3-point shots, however, by Halls' Lola Widener and Sophia Marlow gave the Lady Demons the lead (32-30) for good with 2:10 remaining in

With the victory, Halls (19-4) will advance in the TMSAA tournament and play its next game Saturday at Hardin Valley Academy.

"The key of pulling off our win was eliminating their offensive drive," said Halls Tournament honoree.

Coach Brooke Raiden. "Our girls locked in and started knocking down shots and we made stops on the defensive end. We rebounded better in the second half and we did not give them any second chances. "This group of girls works hard," added

Coach Raiden. "We focus on playing hard for four quarters and we did that. This group's fight is incredible."

Fiona Brewer and Widener led Halls with 12 and 11 points, respectively. Marlow added six points, McClain Turner five and Addie Chipman three.

Gresham's Sasha Foster poured in a game-high 20 points, including four 3-pointers, and was named to the All-

Tournament team. Halls' Widener also was an All-

Dee Williams missed the Fulton High girls' basketball game against Carter Jan. 15 and the Lady Falcons lost 54-41. "Damieona was hospitalized for two days with severe flu-like symptoms," said Fulton Coach Tony Cooper.

She returned to action Saturday, Jan. 18, and led the Lady Falcons to a win over Austin-East and followed that game with another good showing in a win over Seymour. Her absence showed how much she means to her team.

"Dee is an extraordinary player, truly one of a kind," said Coach Cooper last week. "In my coaching experience, she stands out as the most athletic girl I've ever had the privilege to work with. Each game, she consistently dominates the stats, showcasing her unique athleticism. With Dee on our team, we always have a strong opportunity to secure a victory. She is approaching a milestone of 1,000

Spartans notch comeback victory at Catholic

The Irish (15-5, 1-1) had seen their team battle the flu over the past few days and one of the players who was hit the hardest by the illness has been an offensive leader all season. Cade Murphy scored 15 points despite not feeling up to par. He scored nine of his points in the final frame to keep the Irish within striking distance.

"He did everything to prepare himself to help our team today," Irish coach JaJuan Smith said of Murphy. "I'm just glad that he was able to play
